

seems to me that it is nothing but reasonable that we shall take the calendar day of Thursday and let the debate run on and let those who offer amendments discuss them without limitation until Thursday, and then from 2 o'clock in the afternoon until 12 o'clock that night anyone who offers an amendment can have an opportunity to discuss it for five minutes. That is what I was attempting to meet. I just wanted a definite time at which we would know when we would dispose of the bill. There are three whole days in which any amendment can be offered and anyone can debate it, and then from 2 o'clock until midnight on Thursday any amendment may be discussed under the five-minute rule.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is not necessary, Mr. President, in order to dispose of the bill to stay here until midnight of Thursday or of any other day. I do not think we have arrived at the stage of the consideration of this bill when it is necessary to stay here all night to dispose of it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think not; I merely used that by way of illustration.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think it could be disposed of much earlier than that, for it is now before the Senate; and when there is no one here on the floor insisting on speaking, the Senator can call for a vote on the bill or on any amendment that may be pending.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator will allow me—

Mr. POINDEXTER. It could be readily disposed of by limiting the debate after a certain time—the time to be fixed to suit the chairman of the committee—to five minutes upon the bill and any amendment to it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. As the Senator will remember, the proposed agreement says not later than the time indicated. There are a number of Senators here who think we will dispose of the bill before then. The agreement does not say that at that particular time the bill shall be voted on and disposed of, but "not later" than that time. I am of the opinion that we will get through with it without the five-minute limitation, if the Senator will allow the request for unanimous consent to be agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 5 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 19, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Monday, February 18, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. William Couden, of Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Creator and Lord of sun, moon, and stars; assailed at times by the Psalmist's misgiving we cry. What are man and his transient affairs to Thee? Yet we know of Thy ever-creative imminence in the earth, for Thou art everywhere. And even the humblest of us is subject to the insistent claims of the moral law. And we have the sure testimony of thousands that Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee. Move our faith to Thee, O God, faith in Thy boundless care for us and our importance to Thee. And anchor us to right endeavor with that hope that maketh not ashamed.

In the solemn hush of night; in the broad light of day, with its manifold temptations; in all our sorrows, fears, and joys; and in our present view of a world brokenhearted, drenched in tears, crimson with blood, choked by smoke and hatred, let us glimpse often, we entreat Thee, the unfading glory of Thy majesty and know the changeless decrees of Thy throne and feel the heart-throbs of Thy tender but conquering love.

Let us not deny Thee by despair nor forsake Thee by our shame. But let us expect great things from God and attempt great things for God.

Through Him who yielded his place in heaven and emptied himself of all pride that we might be exalted; who became poor that we might be rich; who took upon Himself the likeness of sinful flesh that we might obtain the spirit; who died that we might have life everlasting. Amen.

The Journals of the proceedings of Saturday, February 16, 1918, and Sunday, February 17, 1918, were read and approved.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leaves of absence were granted to—
Mr. BOOHER, indefinitely, on account of sickness in family.
Mr. BLACKMON, for four days, on account of official business for the Government.

Mr. TAGUE, for 10 days, on account of illness at home.

UNITED STATES BUREAU OF EFFICIENCY (H. DOC. NO. 901).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying documents, was ordered printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

As required by acts of Congress approved March 4, 1915, and February 28, 1916, I transmit herewith the report of the United States Bureau of Efficiency for the period from November 1, 1916, to October 31, 1917.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, 16 February, 1918.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds may be permitted to sit during the sessions of the House to consider the $50,000,000 housing bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida, chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, asks unanimous consent that his committee may be permitted to sit during the sessions of the House to consider the $50,000,000 housing proposition. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is that the bill that was taken from the Committee on Labor?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes. We are engaged in hearings now.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RAILROAD LEGISLATION.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes in order to have read a letter from the Director General of Railroads, Mr. McAdoo.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to have a letter from the Director General of Railroads McAdoo read. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, February 16, 1918.

MY DEAR JUDGE SIMS: May I take the liberty of expressing the hope that the House may soon be able to take action upon the pending railroad bill?

I can not overemphasize the urgent necessity for prompt action in this matter. This is the time of the year when the railroads should be placing orders for essential equipment and making preparation for those improvements in their facilities which will enable them to meet the great and urgent demands for transportation for which they now not only have insufficient motive power and equipment but, in many cases, inadequate facilities. It is a great task to do the required work in time to get the benefits this year. It is my earnest conviction that every day's delay in setting this work forward is imperiling the success of the war, limiting the industrial efficiency, and jeopardizing the general prosperity and welfare of the country. We can not go forward with many matters of vital moment until the pending railroad bill becomes a law.

With warm regard, I am,

Cordially, yours,

W. G. McAdoo.

Hon. T. W. SIMS,

Chairman, Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, House of Representatives.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 9867, the urgent deficiency appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, with Mr. GARNER in the chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

Not to exceed $50,000 of the funds derived from the sale of timber from the Red Lake Indian Forest, Minn., under authority of the act of May 18, 1916 (39 Stats., p. 137), may be expended by the Secretary of the Interior in the logging, booming, towing, and manufacturing of timber from burned-over areas at the Red Lake Agency sawmill and in the reimbursement from the said timber receipts of the amounts expended from other Indian tribal funds in the prosecution of such work.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph just read.

Mr. SHERLEY. All right.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I do so for the purpose of inquiring the necessity of including this in a deficiency appropriation bill. It is clearly legislation authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to rotate a fund, contrary to the policy of the Indian Bureau and of the Committee on Indian Affairs for years. We have never permitted the Indian Office to rotate funds of this character.

Mr. SHERLEY. It was not done to make a rotation fund. The reason for it is simply to enable them to cut some timber that has been burnt over, and that will be lost if it is not marketed within a reasonable time. The statement was made that under existing law they did not have any authority to cut this timber, and there did not seem to be any reason why the burnt timber should not be cut and marketed, therefore the committee made the authorization.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I make the point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. On what ground does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. On the ground that it is legislation.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the Chair please, it is work that is already under way. They have been cutting some of this timber.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, no; the Indian Office has never had any authority, and the Secretary of the Interior has never had any authority to rotate funds as proposed in this bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. This does not make a rotating fund. That is not the effect of the language. There has been authority given and timber has been cut. If the Chair will indulge me a moment I will find the statute and read it.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, yes; the Secretary has been authorized to cut timber, but the money has been converted into the Treasury and appropriated in the regular way. I have no objection to permitting them to go ahead and cut this timber and put the money into the Treasury, and provide for its appropriation in the usual way, but I shall make a point of order against the legislation proposed.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not know what the gentleman means by "the usual way." This is the usual way, and is simply extending the operations to this burnt-over area.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; he is permitted to use the fund arising from the sale of this timber.

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course, to cut more of it. And why should he not?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Because we have never permitted that sort of thing to be done.

Mr. SHERLEY. Why should it not be done? Can the gentleman state any reason why, at a time when the Treasury is being burdened, we should further burden it by a direct $50,000 appropriation?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It happens to be a very large subject, and it is an unwise policy to permit any department of the Government to do this.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would rather have the reason than the conclusion of the gentleman. What is the reason it is unwise?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It is unwise because it permits a department of the Government to cut timber and sell it and get the money for it, and use this money as it may see fit, using it as a rotating fund, under the discretion of employees. It is a dangerous policy.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do I understand that the gentleman's objection is only to the last three lines of the paragraph? The gentleman, I take it, has no objection to allowing $50,000 of funds derived from the sale of timber to be used for this purpose? It is only to the last three lines, I believe, that the gentleman is raising his objection. The lines that I refer to are the following:

And in the reimbursement from the said timber receipts of the amounts expended from other Indian tribal funds in the prosecution of such work.

If those lines were eliminated, would the gentleman have any objection to the remainder?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That would leave it less objectionable.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand, the gentleman's objection would then be removed, because they would be limited to a fund of $50,000 derived from the sale of timber, for this purpose, instead of taking the $50,000 out of the General Treasury. This would take the $50,000 from funds that would be derived from the sale of timber on this reservation. I should think that would be satisfactory.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the Chair please, I am prepared to discuss the point of order. In the Indian appropriation bill for 1916 the Secretary is expressly authorized to obtain sawmills and cut lands, and use the interest on the funds derived from the sale of the timber, and this language occurs:

After the payment of all expenses connected with the administration of these lands—

And that includes the lands involved here—

as herein provided, the net proceeds therefrom shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Red Lake Indians and draw interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum. The interest on this fund may be used by the Secretary of the Interior in such manner as he shall consider most advantageous and beneficial to the Red Lake Indians. Expenditure from the principal shall be made only after the approval by Congress of estimates submitted by the said Secretary.

Now, an estimate has been submitted by the Secretary. It is regularly before Congress, has been regularly presented to the committee, and by the committee to the House, and it is up to the House to determine whether it wants to make the appropriation or not. The point of order clearly does not lie. I will send the statute to the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Kentucky answer this question—

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair caught the reading of the statute it provided that the interest should be used as a revolving fund.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I beg pardon, but—

The CHAIRMAN. Just a moment.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I aided in the preparation of that statute, and I do not think it bears the construction placed upon it by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course the statute speaks for itself, as all statutes do.

The CHAIRMAN. If the Chair may be permitted to ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question—

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it the position of the gentleman from Kentucky that the interest authorized by this statute can be utilized by the Secretary of the Interior as he may deem proper?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is so stated in express terms.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any evidence that the $50,000 proposed to be appropriated here is a part of the interest?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; but if the Chair will permit, the very next line says that the principal can be used upon estimates submitted by the Secretary and upon appropriation by Congress, and that is just what we are doing.

The CHAIRMAN. Was there an estimate submitted for this?

Mr. SHERLEY. There was an estimate submitted in due course.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That does not come within the spirit of the law. The money derived from the sale of this timber is placed in the Treasury as other funds are placed in the Treasury, and appropriated in the same manner as other funds. If it were appropriated out of the funds placed in the Treasury as the result of the sale of these lands they would not need to refer to it at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Kansas to this language.

After the payment of all expenses connected with the administration of these lands as herein provided, the net proceeds therefrom shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Red Lake Indians.

That does not have to be appropriated by Congress, and then it says:

Expenditure from the principal shall be made only after the approval by Congress of estimates submitted by the said Secretary.

This seems to come within that provision, Congress having reserved to itself the right to state how the principal shall be used.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The intention is to place the money in the Treasury and have it appropriated in the regular way, and it is not necessary to refer to it, as in the first part of this paragraph, as money derived from the sale of this timber. It is in the Treasury to the credit of the Indians and may be appropriated on estimates from the Secretary of the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman concedes that estimates have been sent in for this item?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I assume that they have been.

Mr. SHERLEY. There is no doubt about that.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the examination and classification of lands requisite to the determination of their suitability for enlarged homesteads, stock-raising homesteads, public watering places, and stock driveways, as required by the public-land laws, $150,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I understand the appropriation of $150,000 for the examining and classification of lands requisite to the determination of their suitability for enlarged homesteads is not limited to the Territory of Alaska?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; it has no relation to Alaska at all. It relates to lands in a homestead act which we passed which requires their classification before they shall be open to homesteaders. There are several hundred thousand now waiting to go on these lands, and there has been a very insistent demand that the work should go forward.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For temporary and auxiliary clerk hire and for substitute clerk hire for clerks and employees absent with pay at first and second class post offices and temporary and auxiliary clerk hire at summer and winter resort post offices, $1,800,000.

Mr. GILLET. Mr. Chairman, many statements have been made in this House about the trouble with the mails going to our soldiers in France. This morning it happens that I received three letters much in the line of others which I have received. One was a little different, because it refers particularly to Christmas boxes. It said that in November the War Department issued a circular stating that any box weighing not over 20 pounds marked "Christmas box" and addressed to a soldier in France and sent so it would be received in New York on or before December 5 would be delivered free of charge on Christmas morning in France. He says that he sent two boxes—one on November 27 and one on November 29—so they had plenty of time to reach New York before December 5, and that they did reach there, and yet 10 days ago he learned from a friend who had received a letter from his son, written on Christmas day, that he had received no box from home, though he had received several parcel-post packages from other people. Neither of the boxes, which were of considerable value, arrived at all. He said that the value of the boxes was considerable, but the main cause of regret is the disappointment of the boy in France.

I have also received a letter from a lady, who says:

I am writing this letter to call your attention to the mail service to the boys in France. My brother left Massachusetts in September and writes me a letter, dated November 23, that he has received only one letter from the good old U. S. A. I have written 15 letters, and his mother has sent him still more. We sent him three packages, none of which he has received. He writes that he is very lonesome (he is only a boy) and very much worried because he does not hear from home.

In the same mail I received another letter of the same purport. It says:

My son has been in France since the first part of December, and from that time to this we have sent him a Christmas box, mailed letters, two or three a week, sent newspapers once or twice a week, magazines, knitted articles—such as helmets, scarfs, sweaters—cigarettes, candy, fountain pen, and things too numerous to mention. I received a letter from him yesterday, dated January 27, and up to that time from the last part of December he had not received any of the many things sent.

I state these things in corroboration of the many statements which have been made in the hope that the Post Office Department will increase its efforts to remedy these shameful miscarriages.

The Clerk read as follows:

The proceeds heretofore or hereafter received from the disposition of nitrate of soda under the appropriation of $10,000,000 contained in section 27 of the act approved August 10, 1917, shall be credited to the said appropriation of $10,000,000 and be available for the purposes authorized in the said action during the period of the existing war as defined by section 24 of the said act.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order, to ask the chairman what special reason there is for inserting this here.

Mr. SHERLEY. The reason was that it came to the attention of the committee that the Agricultural Department had obtained a certain amount of nitrates which had been disposed of; that there was a demand for very much more than that. And while the Agricultural Department was not certain whether it would be able to get additional ships or not, if it could get the ships it was desirable to have this money available for the procurement of the additional nitrates for agricultural purposes. It further appeared that an amendment to this effect was placed on the Agricultural bill in the Senate; that the matter was agreeable to the Agricultural Committee of the House, and it was put up in here rather than in the Agricultural bill to make it available earlier should the contingencies arise which might make it necessary.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That was the very point I was coming to. It seemed to me this was a matter that ought to come within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. SHERLEY. We would not have touched it except with the understanding that it was acceptable to the chairman and, as I said, to the committee, and that a similar provision was pending to the Agricultural bill in the Senate.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Well, it seems to me—

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] was the mover in the matter and I think could give the gentleman even fuller information than I can, but that is my understanding, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not think this provision ought to be contained in the bill. My understanding is that the Agricultural Committee will shortly come in with another bill—

Mr. SHERLEY. I suggest the gentleman let the matter be passed for the present.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I would ask then unanimous consent that this matter may be passed for the present—

Mr. SHERLEY. With the point of order pending?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. With the point of order pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that this item be passed temporarily with the point of order pending. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

For additional for procuring, storing, and furnishing seeds as authorized by section 3 of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products," approved August 10, 1917, including not to exceed $5,000 for rent and personal services in the District of Columbia, $4,000,000, which may be used as a revolving fund until June 30, 1918.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 76, line 3, after the figures "$4,000,000," insert:

"Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture may sell the said seed to farmers on security approved by the Secretary and under rules and regulations prescribed by him."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, there has been a great deal of discussion throughout the country during the past two months in regard to Congress making an appropriation for encouraging the sowing of the largest possible acreage of grain crops next spring. In the hearings before the Committee on Agriculture held a few days ago, Food Administrator Mr. Herbert C. Hoover stated that in his judgment it was advisable for the Government at this time to do everything possible to encourage the sowing of the greatest possible acreage of spring wheat next spring. He stated at the hearing that it was quite evident that there was going to be a shortage of wheat in the country this year, and as all winter wheat had already been the only thing that could be done now to increase the acreage of wheat would be to encourage the sowing of a greater acreage of spring wheat. There are a number of districts in the country where there was a crop failure of spring wheat last year that can be greatly helped out if the Secretary of Agriculture is given by Congress the right to sell seed wheat on time to farmers who will put it in and increase the crop of spring wheat. My amendment provides that this wheat can be sold on time, on security approved by the Secretary of Agriculture, and under rules and regulations prescribed by him.

Mr. FLOOD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. NORTON. I will.

Mr. FLOOD. What is the suggestion of the gentleman as to where this wheat will be stored and sold?

Mr. NORTON. It should be stored in and sold from the local elevators in the communities where it is to be sown. I will say, as far as the needs of my State are concerned I believe they have been already largely taken care of. Recently the Legislative Assembly of North Dakota met in special session and amended and extended the provisions of the county seed-bonding law of the State. Under the provisions of this amended county seed-bonding law the need for seed in my State can be pretty well taken care of. There is, however, need in many parts of the country for the legislation which my amendment proposes. Its adoption would largely increase the acreage of spring wheat to be sown next spring in Montana, Wyoming, and North and South Dakota.

Mr. FLOOD. Now, is the proposition to have the Government buy this wheat and send it to each county in those States and have from here a distribution of seeds?

Mr. NORTON. The purpose of my amendment is this, to permit the Secretary of Agriculture, where seed can not be obtained in any other way by farmers who are prepared to sow the seed properly to sell seed to them on time and under rules and regulations prescribed by him to safeguard the Government. I have talked the matter over with the Secretary, and I am certain that in the administration of the provision proposed by my amendment he will be very conservative. He would, I am sure, only authorize the sale of these seeds on time when and where the carrying out of this policy would greatly encourage sowing a greater crop acreage next spring and where the sowing of this increased acreage would be likely to benefit the whole Nation through a large addition to our total food supply at the next harvest.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. I will.

Mr. GOOD. Now, in exercising that privilege he will, of course, grant credit only to the farmer who could not get credit locally?

Mr. NORTON. Certainly.

Mr. GOOD. Then he is granting credit to people who are not entitled to credit from a financial point of view, and as a result the Government would have in a short time bills against every bankrupt farmer who wanted to buy wheat?

Mr. NORTON. Oh, I do not think that is so. I will say this to the gentleman: I think the need for an increased supply of foodstuffs is so great in this country at the present time that the Government would be well justified in adopting the policy of advancing money on time to supply seed to be sown in agricultural districts of the country where, under ordinary circumstances, good crop yields will be returned much more than sufficient in value to pay all the expenses for the seed furnished and for the sowing, harvesting, and marketing of the crops.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment, and I would like to have a little time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the point of order. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order, or does he desire to discuss the merits of the proposition? The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am willing to reserve the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from North Dakota. I am afraid that the committee has gone further in this respect in granting an appropriation of $4,000,000 for the purchase of seed in this emergency than it ought to have gone. At any rate, it has appropriated ample. The proposition smacks a little too much of paternalism to suit me, and I represent an entirely agricultural community. I would do nothing to hamper this great industry. I have read with interest the extended hearings on this subject, and there is not a word with regard to a shortage of wheat seed; not a word with regard to the need of cotton seed; not a word with regard to the shortage of barley seed or flax seed; certainly not a word as to the need of peanuts; and the Secretary of Agriculture came before the committee and said that because of the cold season last year, especially in the Northwest and Middle West, there was a great amount of soft corn, in some localities the moisture being as high as 80 per cent, and in but a few was the moisture as low as 20 per cent. And the department has felt that the farmers in the corn belt were going to have trouble in buying suitable seed corn for the spring planting. We have here an estimate of the Secretary of Agriculture to purchase seed. His estimate is as follows:

Purchases of seed that are being made under the provisions of section 3 of Public No. 40, $2,500,000.

Crop.	Estimated quantity to be purchased.	Estimated cost, including all overhead charges.	Purchases commenced.	Purchases must conclude.	Sales commenced or will commence.	Sales to date, Jan. 31, 1918.	Sales must conclude.	Estimated receipts from sales available for resale or purchase of seed, spring of 1918.

Let us look at this estimate, $750,000 with which to purchase seed oats. We never had a better oat crop than we had last year throughout the length and breadth of the United States, and every bushel is suitable for seed. And yet at a time when oats were selling around 60 cents a bushel it is proposed to buy them for a dollar a bushel and sell them to the farmer at a dollar a bushel when the farmers can buy the seed oats for much less. There is something out of joint here.

What else did he propose to do? In time of war he intended to spend $250,000 for the purchase of seed peanuts. Not a word in the hearings with regard to peanuts. Is there a scarcity of peanuts for seed? No one has said there was, so far as I can know. If there is, ought we not to have heard something about it? Why, then, should our Government loan $250,000 to permit the Secretary of Agriculture to buy peanuts?

Now, I know nothing about the cotton situation, and yet the Secretary of Agriculture proposes to purchase $200,000 worth of cotton seed. Is there a shortage? If so, to what extent does it exist? How far would $200,000 worth of cotton seed go to relieve the situation in the South if there is a demand for cotton seed because of poor seed or of shortage?

Take it in my own section. It is proposed now, in the face of a great shortage, to purchase only 50,000 bushels of seed corn. That amount of seed corn is not enough to plant the corn in two of the counties of my district. I doubt if it is enough to purchase enough for one. And at the same time they propose to buy 125,000 bushels of soy beans, and anybody who knows anything about that part of the country knows that there is not one farmer in a hundred growing soy beans. Is this an attempt to deprive the corn farmer of seed corn and force soy beans on him instead?

Now, what is the situation? There appears to be a total lack of comprehensive knowledge with regard to these seeds, the needs of the country so far as the things in which there is a shortage are concerned. There was a good reason to do something for seed corn in the corn belt, because we had the poorest crop of corn so far as quality is concerned that we ever had, and business men and farmers and bankers look with some apprehension on the coming spring so far as having a quality of seed that can be relied on is concerned. Throughout Illinois and Indiana and Iowa and Missouri and Nebraska, in those corn States, what did these men do? The farmers organized through their local agents, and with the aid of the banks and business houses and manufacturers they took a census of the corn that was suitable for seed purposes. In my own State the governor required a comprehensive survey to be made, and those reports are coming in, and all the corn of last year that is suitable for seed corn is being located and conserved, and the corn of last year that matured so that it would make good seed corn is being set aside. The business man and the farmers and the bankers are doing that work. And this fund will go to but a very limited extent to relieve that situation. What is true in Iowa I conclude to be true in the corn belt.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. REAVIS. Has not that survey disclosed that, generally speaking, the 1917 crop is unfit for seed corn in that locality?

Mr. GOOD. The survey, according to a dispatch that I saw from one county in my State, and it is a representative county, showed that there was about 2 to 5 bushels per school district of shortage, taking into consideration the corn that was raised last year that was suitable for seed. I think this estimate includes the corn of the 1916 crop that had been preserved and could be used for seed.

Mr. REAVIS. What I am trying to learn is this: Is practically all the seed corn suitable for your locality confined to the 1916 crop?

Mr. GOOD. I think a great deal of it is; but there is some good seed corn in the 1917 crop.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NORTON. I take it the gentleman knows that at the present time the Food Administration is trying, by regulations which it is putting into force, to reduce the consumption of wheat during the coming six months in this country 30 per cent, and that this policy is being resorted to on account of the great needs of this country and our allies for wheat and wheat products. I take it the gentleman knows that, as far as it now can be seen, there is going to be a large shortage in the wheat crop of this year. Would the gentleman, then, be opposed to having the Secretary of Agriculture given the right to furnish seed wheat on time to farmers in districts where they could not otherwise secure seed, if on being so supplied with seed wheat they would plant it, care for it, and harvest it and add greatly to the Nation's total wheat supply for this year?

Mr. GOOD. No; if they could not otherwise get it; but there is no community in the whole United States that is so unpatriotic that would not respond and furnish the funds to purchase seed wheat to seed every acre of available land, and the gentleman knows it; and the gentleman knows that in his own State—

Mr. NORTON. If what the gentleman asserts is true, then if the authority proposed by my amendment is given the Secretary of Agriculture he would find no occasion to use it.

Mr. GOOD. I think there might be very good reason for some activity on the part of the Department of Agriculture, but I think we are going too far, and even with this reduced approprition, I think perhaps it is more than it ought to appropriate for the purchase of seeds whether there is a shortage or not. I am for the provision, but I think that we ought not to extend Government agencies in this direction; we should limit this authority. We are purchasing cotton seed and peanut seed and oats. At the time this estimate was made oats were selling for about 60 cents a bushel. Farmers could buy them for that sum. And it is here proposed to pay $1 a bushel, and they will cost that amount plus costs of administration.

And I notice in the estimates for storage it is proposed to spend considerable for storage here in the District of Columbia. There is no need for storing a bushel of corn, or peanuts, or anything of that kind here in the District of Columbia. The need is in the localities where they raise these things, and therefore need the seed for the coming spring.

Mr. NORTON. I quite agree with the gentleman in that. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I do not believe the Government ought to go into the business of extending credit to the farmers for these purposes, and I do not believe the farmers of the United States want it. Under all the circumstances not a dollar should be expended for peanuts, and not a dollar for other seeds, except where there is actual shortage in certain localities.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, the fact that the Government might stand to lose something in granting credit by furnishing seed for these people in the Northern States in order to increase the wheat raised is not conclusive to my mind. The Government has undertaken to encourage the farmers of the Northwest to produce food in large quantities, and the Government can not expect to go the whole way in the matter of encouragement unless it will take some risk itself.

Throughout the States of Iowa, Nebraska, Illinois, and other States people who feed cattle have responded to the appeal of the Government to place every possible pound of meat upon each brute for the purpose of having a large food production. They patriotically went into the markets last fall and bought feeders at from 10 to 12 cents a pound. Now, after they have fed them at large expense high-priced grain and hay, they are unable to get much, if anything, more than the price that they paid per pound. Everybody who ever fed a steer knows that means a large loss to every owner of every finished steer. On present market prices there is a loss of from $10 to $30 on every finished steer. In common with many of my neighbors, in obedience to the appeal of the Government for a maximum of meat production, I am finishing some at a loss; the lighter ones will probably pay out.

So if the Government of the United States is asking the farmers to increase their acreage of wheat, we know that the only opportunity now is to increase the spring-wheat area. If the Government is asking the farmers to increase their acreage, it should not be so finicky about the possibility of suffering a small loss.

I do not think the people in my State would profit much by the amendment suggested by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON]. That is a newer State, confined largely to spring wheat, while our State is a dual wheat State—winter and spring. From statements I heard made by men living in North Dakota, as well as by Representatives here on the floor, it appears that there are large areas up there which will go unsown unless some substantial aid is given. The mere fact that the Government is running a little risk when it is asking that a great risk shall be run by the farmer who will furnish the land and the toil is to me not conclusive. The amendment of the gentleman from North Dakota should prevail.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I desire to oppose the amendment.

This paragraph proposes to give $4,000,000 to the Secretary of Agriculture for the uses of a revolving fund in connection with the procuring, storing, and furnishing of seed, on the ground that it may be necessary as a war-emergency measure. This item may be all right at the present time, but it looks like an entering wedge for a larger distribution of seed concerning which a propaganda is sweeping over the Northwest and certain other sections of the country. I regret to make this comment in the absence of the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BAER], who seems to be the leading exponent of this new idea, and who has introduced a bill which has been widely commented upon throughout the country, particularly in the country press; but his bill appropriates $50,000,000 for the purchase and distribution of seed, for which the Government is to take the promissory notes of such selected farmers as are fortunate enough to get the seed on these terms.

I think it well to call attention to the importance of the bill introduced by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BAER]. It is a bold and radical departure from the existing order. Section 4 of his bill, which has been widely commented upon in the country press, provides that the money therein appropriated shall be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture in the purchase of seed and grain in connection with the necessary expense incurred in carrying out the provisions of the act, and that the grain and seed shall be sold and distributed to the farmers and stockmen mentioned at a price not to exceed the cost to the Government, the purchaser to give a promissory note therefor, payable one year from date, to the Treasury of the United States, and bearing interest at 4 per cent per annum.

Now, this project is being widely discussed. It is proposed to reach into the Treasury of the United States in these times of war and take out $50,000,000 to buy seed to be turned over to certain stockmen, farmers, and ranchmen in certain States on the strength of promissory notes.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There is no evidence that they are to have collateral property. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. SLOAN. Is not the United States advancing now at least 30 per cent to certain manufacturing concerns to obtain supplies that they deem of importance to the winning of this war, and is there anything more important than the matter of production of food for the winning of this war?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have heard that the administration is sanctioning certain advances to manufacturers and munition makers and others for the purpose of producing munitions of war.

Mr. SLOAN. You have heard that?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; I have heard, I may say, almost the whole story in committee.

Mr. HELVERING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. HELVERING. That is by virtue of the law passed by the last Congress.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I presume it is by virtue of law, war-emergency law, otherwise the administration would not have followed this method. But the method is subject to abuses even during the war.

I have little to say about the question of lending or advancing 30 per cent to munition manufacturers, except that in that case there is property upon which the Government may fall back to recoup its losses. I presume the administration is wise enough to protect itself in regard to advances thus made for the purpose of hastening war preparations. But I question whether we have that protection in connection with this $50,000,000 seed proposition. We have there only the individual promise to pay. We have run wild in the matter of expense due to the war. We have advanced and loaned money to munition makers for the production of war material, and we have aided the farmers, but I doubt whether we have yet arrived at that stage of paternalism in the United States where we are prepared to use the tax money of the people to make advances to men who have only something in prospect to redeem their promises.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, it may take a great war to shake the reactionary and stand-pat proclivities of my good friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]. He is treating this proposition very lightly. I believe the most serious condition that confronts the United States in any of its present activities in preparation for this war is the crop of 1918.

I want to tell the gentleman something about the section of the country that produces a good deal of foodstuffs as well as practically all the cotton that goes to clothe the people of this country. These big northern contractors who have been sent down there to build these great Government works—and it looks now as if nobody could build anything in that country except one of these fellows from away off, and mighty few local contractors can do anything in that country—they come down there and they utterly disregard how they gather labor. They do not care if they take every hand off of a man's farm. They do not care how much they disrupt a man's business, just so they get the labor they want. Now, what is going to happen? In the first place, since December, 1916, up to the 31st day of December, 1917, 112,000 negroes left the State of Georgia alone. They were attracted by the high prices paid for labor in the great civic centers. The draft came along—very properly—and it has taken a great many of the boys off of the farms.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is the difficulty in the factories. They have taken them out of the factories in a larger percentage and have disorganized them.

Mr. HOWARD. That is true; but here is a proposition to increase the supply of food, and I assume that Napoleon was right when he said that an army travels on its stomach. I am trying to show you that this Government has got to do radical things to encourage the production of food for this year, and you can not wait until April or May to do it. You have got to do it now, and, in my judgment, you can not give the farmers of this country any too much encouragement to produce food. Some of you gentlemen were very anxious to fix a price on cotton that would not pay for the cost of planting. I will venture the prediction now that if they use every available man and every available mule in the South to put cotton seed into the ground there will not be 9,000,000 bales of cotton produced in the South in the year 1918.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Does the gentleman think there is any more reason for fixing the price of wheat than there was for fixing the price of cotton?

Mr. HOWARD. Not any, if you fix a minimum. What was the use to fix a price on wheat if you did not fix the price of the manufactured product somewhere? What is the use of fixing a price on raw cotton if you turn your cotton mills loose to charge 40 or 50 cents a yard for cotton cloth? When we fix a price on cotton we are going to save the people of this country from paying exorbitant prices for the manufactured cotton, because we are going to fix a price on that, too, on a cost-plus basis. Mark that prediction.

Mr. KNUTSON. I will say to the gentleman that he had better ask the President why the consumers have not been looked after.

Mr. HOWARD. The consumers are being looked after; but the trouble about this whole war is, in some quarters—and it is pretty well distributed over the country—that there is a good deal of patriotism exhibited when there is a dollar of profit in it; and if you can fix some plan to stop the profiteers from operating right now during this war, and will present it to this Congress so that we can act on it, so as to stop it, the Washington Monument will not be as high as an ant hill by the side of the monument that the people of this country will erect to your memory. Now, you get busy and see what you can do. [Applause.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Well, I am not President.

Mr. HOWARD. Thank the Lord for that.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not come from an agricultural district. At the same time I believe that next to the need of ships our greatest need, and the most disquieting situation to-day, is the production of food for this coming year. So I think everything we can do which is going to stimulate food production we ought to do. I heartily acquiesce in this proposition of the committee, and my only fear is, as the gentleman from Iowa indicated, that it is not large enough or rightly proportioned to accomplish the purpose intended. But as there is a revolving-fund proposition wrapped up in it, it may be that it will achieve more than I expect. From all I can learn, it seems to me that what is troubling the farmers and preventing their setting out for an enormous production of foodstuffs this year is not only the lack of seed but a fear of the lack of labor. And it seems to me that we ought also—although perhaps that is a matter exclusively within the power of the administration—to provide, just as far as we can, that a labor supply shall be given to the farmer, because he is not going to buy seed and sow seed if he does not think he can reap the crops when they mature. As I understand it, last year enormous crops lay and rotted simply for lack of labor to harvest them. I think the remedy is either by arranging the draft law so that farm laborers shall not be taken or by paroling men from our cantonments to go back to the farms, so that the farmers can have the skilled labor which they need to harvest the crops, and therefore stimulate the farmers to plant this spring.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not true that the shortage of labor which troubles the farmer also troubles the shipbuilder?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And is it not true that the shipbuilder is just as important in this war as the producer of food?

Mr. GILLETT. I said at the beginning that it seemed to me that to-day the first instance where we are likely to fall down is on shipping, and next on food, but the trouble has been, I think, that a large part of the farm labor, even before the draft, was drawn away from the farm by the attractiveness of the wages paid by munition factories and shipyards; so that even before the draft began the farmer had a very small quota of labor compared with what he had before and compared with what he needs.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman certainly would not take labor away from the shipyards or from the great industrial establishments and send it back to the farms again?

Mr. GILLETT. I said the only proposition that occurred to me, or the easiest one, is to send the experienced farmers from the cantonments and the National Guard camps.

Mr. NORTON. That is just exactly the point, that the men are being drawn from the farms to the shipyards where they are paid from $6 to $15 a day, and a man can not afford to stay on the farm and raise wheat at $2.20 a bushel. The farmer who raises that wheat can not afford to pay more than $2 a day for help.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I think the administration already has in mind some military proposition looking toward the possibility of utilizing the Army for industrial purposes, or a part of it, when occasion may demand, and legislation to that effect is under consideration.

Mr. GILLETT. I am much obliged to the gentleman; I am not in the secrets of administrative legislation as much as is the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I would accept that as a compliment if I thought there was a compliment in it.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman understands that it has not been the draft that has drawn the men away from the farms but the allurements of higher prices elsewhere.

Mr. GILLETT. But the draft also.

Mr. TILSON. The figures show that the percentage of men drawn away from the farms and inducted into the military service has been almost negligible. The percentage has been very small. I call the gentleman's attention to the report of the Provost Marshal General. The real point is that they have been drawn away from the farm to these other places that pay them very much better than they were ever paid on the farm. There has been little difficulty from the draft itself.

Mr. GILLETT. Of course, we recognize that the farmer can not pay larger prices and still sell his produce at a profit, and therefore he is tempted not to increase production to the point that the country needs.

Mr. TILSON. That is true.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I would be glad if the Chair would inform the committee what the matter is now pending before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia). It is an amendment to which a point of order has been reserved.

Mr. CANNON. I demand the regular order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MONDELL. I gave notice when the bill was taken up that I would offer an amendment to this section, and I desire to offer an amendment as a substitute to the amendment now pending against which the point of order is reserved. Can I offer that amendment now with the point of order reserved?

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order has been called for. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist on his demand?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no; Mr. Chairman, let the brethren talk. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I insist on the point of order. Section 3 of this law provides:

That whenever the Secretary of Agriculture shall find that there is or may be a special need in any restricted area for seeds suitable for the production of food or feed crops, he is authorized to purchase or contract with persons to grow such seeds, to store them, and to furnish them to farmers for cash, at cost, including the expense of packing and transportation.

I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph in the bill is in aid of section 3, the food survey law. That provides that the Secretary shall sell for cash. The amendment provides that the Secretary shall have authority to sell it for credit. That is an enlargement of the power of the Secretary; it is legislation on an appropriation bill and is out of order. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer my amendment as a substitute for the paragraph.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to the paragraph. Would not that come in ahead of the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming?

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment to perfect the paragraph comes in ahead of the substitute.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I do not know whether it is to perfect the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "fund," line 4, page 76, add "and a like revolving fund of $4,000,000 to loan for the purchase of machinery."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order to that.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will reserve it.

The CHAIRMAN. That involves the same point that the Chair has already ruled upon.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, it has been said that what the farmer needs is more labor, that although we may buy them the seed or sell it to them, yet if they have not the labor to do the work they can not produce the crops. It is manifest to anybody who knows anything about a farm that if we have the proper machinery we can produce larger crops with a much smaller amount of labor. There are many farmers in the country who would put in more crops, purchase seed, and raise more for the American people, but they are absolutely unable financially to purchase the machinery necessary to carry on the farm according to modern ideas. My amendment would help them in this way. You could lend the man the money to buy the seed, or purchase seed and sell it to him, and at the same time you could lend him the money or purchase machinery and sell it to him on time, so that he could produce a larger crop. If we have proper machinery on the farms we can do the labor with one-third less men than heretofore necessary on the farm. While the large majority of farmers are able to purchase the machinery and do so, and raise large crops, there is a certain class who are absolutely afraid of debt, as afraid of debt as a man is of fire. These timid, though capable, farmers are the ones I wish to reach.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. What kind of machinery would save one-third of the labor on the farm at the present time?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Small tractors, drills, etc.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. We have already got them.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I am talking about the farmer who has not them and who has not the money to purchase them.

Mr. HOWARD. He can not buy Ford tractors now.

Mr. LINTHICUM. There are a lot of other good tractors besides Ford tractors.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Does the gentleman know of any small farmers who have felt warranted to put in tractors?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I think a small tractor could be used in a small field.

Mr. KNUTSON. You have to have at least 80 acres to make it pay.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Oh, no; I own farms myself, and you can use a tractor on a 10-acre field to advantage. I have used them.

Mr. KNUTSON. I am a farmer.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Why, a small tractor can be used to advantage on an acre of ground.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman were representing a bank to which a request for money to buy tractors had been made, what sort of security would the gentleman require?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I want to say that I have represented clients and that I have loaned money to farmers all of my life. I have loaned it to them on their individual promissory notes, and also with an indorsement, and I have yet to find a farmer who refused to pay his bills when he was able to do so. I find they are nearly always able to meet these demands. I do not know that we should compel land security. A farmer can often raise half or third of the money necessary for the machinery, and the balance can be loaned on chattel mortgage on the machinery.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would the gentleman put the Government in the position of providing a fund of $4,000,000 with which to buy machinery to give to farmers, taking as security for it their promissory notes?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I should not want to lend it to all farmers on promissory notes, but I think that there are many farmers to whom the Government can safely lend $4,000,000 in small sums with which to buy farm machinery.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would the gentleman do the same thing for a man who came forward and said, "I would like to build a mill, or engage in an industrial enterprise, but I have no money?"

Mr. LINTHICUM. We are doing it to-day. Did not the gentleman vote the other day to put up houses, investing the sum of $50,000,000, for workers at the mills?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We did not vote on the bill, but I would do it because of an emergency of war, as represented by the President.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Does the gentleman not look upon food as just as much an emergency of war as munitions?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; I do; but I would like to have some assurance that the food was going to be produced. Cotton, for instance, is not food, yet cotton seed are provided for here.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I think that if you leave it to the farmers and give them proper support, you will have that assurance.

Mr. FARR. We have appropriated millions of dollars for the enlargement of plants for the building of aeroplanes. Farm tractors and other labor-saving machinery would greatly add to the production of food so greatly needed, and the Government could be very helpful in doing this.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Certainly; and we are lending in every way for manufacturing munitions and housing and for building aeroplanes, and I think $4,000,000 could be easily risked to let the farmers produce larger crops.

Mr. NORTON. Does not the gentleman base his amendment on a war emergency?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Absolutely.

Mr. KNUTSON. Would the gentleman accept an amendment so that city dwellers could get tractors with which to plow their gardens?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MONDELL offers the following substitute for the paragraph beginning on line 21, page 75:

"To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the emergency caused by the need for food and seed crops by purchasing or contracting with persons who grow seeds suitable for the production of food crops and to store, transport, and furnish such seed to farmers for cash at approximately the cost of the same or on credit with approved security of financial or business organizations guaranteeing the same, $5,000,000, and this fund may be used as a revolving fund until the Secretary of Agriculture determines that no such emergency exists, and the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to pay all such expenses, including rent, and to employ such persons and means in the District of Columbia and elsewhere and to cooperate with such State authorities or local organizations or individuals as he may deem necessary."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the item for which we are providing a deficiency originally was $2,500,000, and out of a proposed appropriation of $6,000,000 the committee has granted four. This provides for the purchase of seeds and their sale at cost. It is a splendid provision of law. Much good has been accomplished under it, but there are conditions in the western country that make it impossible for people in considerable areas out there to avail themselves of this opportunity to buy for cash. The Agricultural Department very properly objects to selling to individual farmers on credit, but in our country for years past we have in almost every county voluntary organizations of bankers and business men who have guaranteed $5,000, $10,000, $15,000, $20,000, or whatever sum was believed to be necessary for seeds. They have guaranteed this amount of seed purchased by the farmers, and I think there has scarcely been a case where the sums borrowed have not been returned. My amendment increases the item in the bill to the amount of the estimate, increasing it by $2,000,000, and provides that the seeds may be sold for cash or they may be sold on credit on approved security of responsible organizations. In other words, the Secretary of Agriculture could take advantage of these organizations in the various sections of the country where conditions of drought—lack of accumulated capital—render it difficult to secure the capital with which to pay cash for these seeds. He could communicate and negotiate with those associations and distribute such quantity of seeds in the community as these associations, bankers, business men, stockmen, and farmers would obligate themselves to pay for.

Those associations would be very glad to distribute the seeds. They would see that they only got into the hands of those who would pay for them. The Government would be safeguarded, first, by the supervision of these responsible people, and then by the fact that they themselves were responsible to the Government for payment. We have a very considerable area of western country that has been subjected to exceedingly severe drought conditions. Our country is not one of accumulated capital. Local organizations are finding it more and more difficult to advance the money for seeds. We need seeds; we need increased agricultural production. We have great areas there where potatoes can be grown in increased quantities, sugar beets, wheat, and rye. The Secretary would not take advantage of this provision in old communities where there are accumulations of capital and where the people locally should obligate themselves to aid those who are needing seeds. It could be utilized in all that territory from west Texas which has been suffering so severely, on north to Montana, where last year they had a dreadful condition of drought among the new settlers who have no accumulations of capital and who are not in position to pay cash, and the banks in those communities are not so situated that they can advance these sums. We are lending aid and assistance in every direction for the prosecution of the war. Here is a sound business proposition. I do not wonder the Secretary of Agriculture does not want to go into the business of loaning to individual farmers. My provision is one under which the Secretary would only have to deal with organizations here and there, perhaps one in a county.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I do.

Mr. SLOAN. Would the gentleman be willing to accept an amendment to add to "financial or business," "business or farmers' organizations"?

Mr. MONDELL. I would be delighted to do that. I used the terms I did, knowing that my amendment would go out on the point of order, to make it very clear to the Secretary of Agriculture and others whom we need to persuade to change their minds. That we were expecting them to depend only upon very reliable people, not that farmers are not just as reliable as the folks in town, but I suggested business organizations, bankers, and business men to emphasize the business nature of these organizations. Yes, organizations of bankers, business men, and farmers, such that the Secretary shall know that they are reliable and responsible. In our country it has been in the main the large stockmen and larger farmers helping out with the bankers and business men. Mr. Chairman, this item will go out on the point of order, but I am proposing another amendment reducing the appropriation under the Holman rule, which should not go out on the point of order. That will be offered after the point of order is made and sustained to this item.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky insist upon his point of order?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment pending, which I offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute offered by Mr. MONDELL for the paragraph beginning on line 21, page 75, and ending on line 4, page 76:

"For additional for procuring, storing, and furnishing seeds as authorized by section 3 of the act entitled 'An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products,' approved August 10, 1917, including not to exceed $5,000 for rent and personal service in the district of Columbia, $3,999,000, which may be used as a revolving fund until June 30, 1918, and the seeds secured and purchased out of this appropriation may be sold to farmers for cash at their approximate cost, or on credit with approved security of responsible organizations guaranteeing the repayment of same."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is made to the amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the amendment fairly comes within the Holman rule. It is in the language of the item as it is in the bill, reduces the appropriation $1, and provides that these seeds may be sold on credit with approved security to certain organizations. The gentleman from Kentucky has not pointed out in what way the language is subject to the point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. I did not want to interrupt the gentleman's argument.

Mr. MONDELL. I desire to know what the gentleman's point of order is.

Mr. SHERLEY. Why, that it is legislation on an appropriation bill and therefore not in order.

Mr. MONDELL. Legislation, Mr. Chairman, is in order on an appropriation bill under certain conditions if it reduces expenditures—the amount carried in the bill—which this does.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman has concluded his argument, I will be glad to present the reasons why I do not think it comes within the Holman rule.

Mr. MONDELL. I would like to hear the reasons, and I am very sure the Chair would.

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course, I did not want to interrupt the gentleman, and that is the reason I permitted him to continue ad libitum.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not want to take up the time of the committee unnecessarily.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, the reason that the matter is subject to the point of order is because the legislative part of it does not in any sense result in a reduction of the expenditure. If the gentleman's broad contention was true all you would have to do touching any amendment to make it in order would be to reduce by 1 cent any money item in a bill, then add whatever language you pleased, and, according to the gentleman's contention, you would thereby be reducing the expenditure. But the rule was not made for that sort of a case. The rule is that for an amendment to be in order under the Holman rule it must be of such a character as to result in a reduction of salaries or expenses or the general amount carried in the bill. Not even the ingenuity of the distinguished gentleman from Wyoming, exerted in a cause that is most dear to his heart, that of the farmer, is sufficient to enable him or anybody else to show that selling on credit instead of for cash will save money to the Government of the United States, and I submit the matter is manifestly subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia). The situation developed by this amendment is as follows: The amendment first proposes to reduce the amount carried in this paragraph. That is perfectly competent under parliamentary law. In addition it is proposed for legislation to accompany the reducing portion of the amendment. But this legislation has no sort of relation to the proposed reduction. It is perfectly competent to legislate on an appropriation bill, provided the legislation proposed necessarily effects a reduction; but it is just as plainly incompetent to propose a reducing amendment to an appropriation bill a motion which can be made at any time without reference to the Holman rule and then undertake to attach to this motion legislation which does not effect the reduction and is not in any wise related to it.

Now, that is the situation presented by the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], and his amendment is plainly out of order. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. GOOD and Mr. MORGAN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa, a member of the committee, submits an amendment, which he will send to the desk and the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GOOD: At the end of line 4, on page 76, insert the following:

"Provided, That no part of said sum shall be used for the purchase of seeds of any kind except in cases where the Secretary of Agriculture shall find there is a shortage of seed of such variety."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to do anything to cripple the Department of Agriculture in this regard. I do not want to do a thing that will prevent the largest possible production of agricultural products, but I want to say frankly and earnestly that I am amazed at the statement of the Department of Agriculture with regard to what they did with the $2,500,000 appropriated for this purpose and what they now proposed to do with the $6,000,000 asked for.

I have objected to river and harbor appropriations because they were trades, and I am opposed to this because it seems to be on the same kind of a basis. For instance, under the $2,500,000 appropriation we find the Secretary purchased, for Texas, corn, $75,000; cotton, $290,000; sorghum, $310,000; peanuts, $215,000—or $890,000. Then for the Northwest—Montana and North Dakota—barley, $339,500; flax, $210,000; oats, $250,000—or $800,000, the same amount that was given to Texas; and then corn for the Northwest. And, mind you, in these hearings the only thing that is pointed out by the department where there is an actual shortage is in corn; and yet all the rest of the corn-producing part of the country outside of Texas was only given $610,000. Six hundred and eighty-five thousand dollars were spent by the department for corn seed, the only seed mentioned by the department where there is an actual shortage, but $215,000 was spent for peanuts. Are we going to win this war by raising peanuts? There is not a word here that there is a shortage of peanuts or that the peanut seeds are defective; yet the Secretary of Agriculture, out of this appropriation of $6,000,000, is asking for peanuts $250,000, in addition to the $215,000 already spent for such purpose. Not a word that there is a shortage of cotton seed, and yet he wants $500,000 for cotton seed. Not a word that there is a shortage of sorghum seed, and yet he wants $500,000 for that.

Now, I know nothing about a shortage of these seeds. There may be a shortage. But I want to say that the man, I care not what his position may be, who will say that there is a shortage in the United States of oat seed, that the yield in the United States is poor, does not know what he is talking about; and yet they propose here to spend of the $6,000,000 estimated for, $750,000 for oat seed where there is no shortage at all.

Now, what does the amendment accomplish? It does not strike down by a single penny the power of the Secretary of Agriculture to purchase seed, but it does provide he shall not use this fund except to purchase seed where there is a shortage, and he will determine where there is a shortage. That is just what we want to accomplish; and yet under the administration of that law we are not accomplishing that at all. We are giving certain sections of the country, whether there is a shortage or not, the benefit of this revolving fund and the right to purchase seed where there is a shortage, and I am opposed to it. I think the amendment ought to be adopted, for I think we ought to put a limitation on the use of this fund. I do not believe it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. SLOAN. One word. You have "variety" there where you should have "kind" or "species."

Mr. GOOD. I ask to modify the amendment by putting in the word "kind" instead of "variety."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the request of the gentleman will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding the amendment appears in the form of a proviso and a negation, it is, in point of fact, an affirmative statement, and, being affirmative, is legislation and subject to a point of order. As I caught the reading of the amendment, it provides that no part of this money shall be expended unless the Secretary shall find that there is a shortage. Now, the law under which the provision is made provides for the expenditure whenever in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture there may be a special need. This requires the Secretary to spend the money if there is a shortage, and whether there is any need or not.

Mr. GOOD. Does the gentleman think there could be a need for seed if there was not a shortage?

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, manifestly, yes. Although I am not a farmer, I can imagine that situation. There may not be a shortage of seed and yet a considerable shortage in the right kind of seed, and therefore a need to get the right kind of seed. And manifestly the question of need, ability to acquire, the seed within the time and at the place and locality, and the price, are the things which determine the Secretary's action, whereas the gentleman would want him to buy seed whenever there was a shortage of seed.

Mr. GOOD. I do not want to do anything in this regard that I think would in any way interfere with the proper administration of this law.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am sure of that.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman knows, and I am sure will agree with me, that when we adopted this legislation and gave the Department of Agriculture a fund of $2,500,000 with which to purchase whenever in the opinion of the Secretary there was a bad need for it in any restricted area, and there was a shortage of seed of certain kinds, and in order to bring up our production to the highest possible point, the Secretary would thereby be enabled to furnish those particular areas with that kind of seed.

Mr. SHERLEY. That may be true, but the point I am making, Mr. Chairman, is that while the language is disguised in the form of a limitation, in point of fact it is not a limitation but an enlargement.

Mr. GILLETT. It seems to me, if the gentleman will yield a moment—

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. GILLETT (continuing). He seems to suggest compulsion. There is no compulsion.

Mr. SHERLEY. It permits it, and the law does not. The law only permits the Secretary to do it when he shall find a need. This permits him to do it whenever there is a shortage. There may be a shortage without a need.

Mr. GILLETT. And there may be a need without a shortage.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, yes; but I am arguing the parliamentary law proposition.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GILLETT. As I understand it, the gentleman's argument is that the words "need" is smaller than the word "shortage" and embraces less.

Now, it seems to me it is clearly the other way. The law at present says that the Secretary shall do it if there is a need. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa provides that it shall only be done in case of a shortage, so that it seems to me it is clearly a limitation, because it does not strike out the present existence, but provides that—

No part of this fund shall be used for the purchase of seeds except in case the Secretary of Agriculture shall find there is a shortage of seed.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is just it. It requires the doing of an affirmative act by the Secretary before the money is expended. That is not a limitation in a negative sense.

Mr. GILLETT. The Secretary now is required by an affirmative act.

Mr. SHERLEY. I know; but what you are trying to do is, in an appropriation bill, under the guise of a negation, to require an affirmative action on the part of the Secretary of Agriculture, and that is not permitted.

Mr. GILLETT. Under the guise of a limitation.

Mr. SHERLEY. You have to have an actual negation and not simply, under the guise of "Provided," to carry an affirmative action.

Mr. GILLETT. It will be a limitation if it reduces.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman is invoking the Holman rule with a limitation. This has nothing to do with the Holman rule. The rule is that a provision to be in order on an appropriation bill, changing the language, must be a limitation upon the power conferred. For instance, you can provide that where an appropriation was made for the purchase of a certain ship, "Provided, That it could not be expended for a ship of greater tonnage than a certain amount." That would be a limitation. But if you said, "Provided, That it shall not be expended until the Secretary of the Navy shall determine that a ship is of a certain tonnage," then you are legislating. It can be made in order, but it is not in order.

Mr. GILLETT. Now the Secretary of Agriculture can do it, provided there is a need. This says he shall do it provided there is a shortage.

Mr. SHERLEY. It says he shall not do it "except when he shall find," and so forth, which is an affirmative proposition.

Mr. GILLETT. It can easily be said "except when there is a shortage."

The CHAIRMAN. May the Chair ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it intended in the language proposed that the discretion of the Secretary shall be enlarged or reduced?

Mr. GILLETT. Reduced.

Mr. SHERLEY. That operates, then, in changing existing law.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the act of August 10, 1917, which authorizes an appropriation of this kind, provides that "Whenever the Secretary of Agriculture shall find that there is or may be a special need in any restricted area for seeds suitable for the production of food or feed crops, he is authorized," and so forth, requiring of the Secretary of Agriculture the affirmative determination of the needs of the various localities with regard to seed for food and forage crops or anything of that kind.

Now, take the case in a certain community; there may be an ample supply of seed. There may be no shortage at all. Yet John Jones may need some that he does not possess. In that case the Secretary of Agriculture can go into a community and buy for John Jones 100 bushels of oats and turn them over to him, when in that very community there is no shortage at all.

The amendment which I offered simply provides that it shall not be used except where the Secretary of Agriculture shall find there is a shortage. How can the Secretary of Agriculture determine the needs of a man unless he determines whether or not there is a shortage in this or that man's oat or corn bin? If he has more corn than he can plant and otherwise use, he does not need it, does he? And so in the determination of the very things provided for by law are the things he must determine under my amendment. He must determine whether or not there is a shortage in every man's crib. If that is not true, then I do not understand the English language.

Clearly, Mr. Chairman, the amendment is a limitation on this appropriation. I do not care to take up the time of the House, because if it is thought that I am asking the Secretary of Agriculture to do something in addition to what he is authorized to do, I will offer an amendment in another way and remove, so far as I can, that objection. I do not think it subject to a point of order, and I do not now think it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the point of order. I believe the point of order should be sustained. I believe the amendment is clearly subject to a point of order, because it is new legislation, for if enacted it would completely nullify the provision of section 3 of the act of August 10, 1917, which provides:

That whenever the Secretary of Agriculture shall find that there is or may be a special need in any restricted area for seeds suitable for the production of food or feed crops he is authorized to purchase or contract with persons who grow such seeds to store them and to furnish them to farmers for cash, at cost, including the expense of packing and transportation.

If this amendment, which limits the right of the Secretary of Agriculture to purchase when there is a shortage of a particular kind of seed, were enacted, then in the case of the oat crop, if there was a larger production of oats in the country than there was the year prior, or whatever year the comparison is to be made with—and that is not clear in the amendment—then the Secretary of Agriculture would have no right to purchase any oats, although there might be a large need for seed oats in some restricted districts of the country. The object of section 3 of the act of August 10, 1917, was to permit the Secretary to purchase kinds of seed of which there may be a surplus or a shortage grown and to have these seeds supplied to restricted areas where there was a failure or shortage of crops last year and where a supply of the seeds is needed.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. Certainly.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Just for information, I want to inquire as to the words, "which may be used as a revolving fund." Is that in the present law?

Mr. NORTON. No.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Then I do not see the application of the Holman rule. How can this be added without considering the Holman rule, I can not understand.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The Holman rule requires a limitation.

Mr. NORTON. I believe, Mr. Chairman, the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good] would clearly change this provision of the present law and that, accordingly, the amendment is subject to the point of order that it is new legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. GOOD. The whole provision is subject to a point of order, and being subject to a point of order, this amendment can not be. We are amending the law here, making this a revolving fund.

Mr. SHERLEY. Where are we amending the law?

Mr. GOOD. My attention was just called to it.

Mr. SHERLEY. That may be so, but it does not make it so.

Mr. GOOD. The language is, "Which may be used as a revolving fund until June 30, 1918."

Mr. SHERLEY. The law permits it. We are not changing the law.

Mr. GOOD. Where does the law provide that? The law does not provide for that at all. Section 3 says nothing about a revolving fund. The whole provision is subject to a point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. We have the right to appropriate for the seed, and to reappropriate up to June 30 on a deficiency bill.

Mr. GOOD. But you make it a revolving fund.

Mr. SHERLEY. We do; but that is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. GOOD. But it is legislation, is it not?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; I think not.

Mr. GOOD. What was it put in for if it does not give additional power? The gentleman well knows that when the money came back into the Treasury for the sale of 100,000 bushels of corn, it could not be paid out again—

Mr. SHERLEY. Unless we appropriated it.

Mr. GOOD. Unless we appropriated it.

Mr. SHERLEY. But the gentleman assumes that we have no right to appropriate for its use and reuse up to July 1.

Mr. GOOD. I think you are legislating when you make it a revolving fund.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not care to delay the bill. I really do not care what is done with the point of order. I will deal with the merits of the proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. A new question is raised in this connection. Of course, it must be apparent that if the paragraph proposed to be amended is itself subject to a point of order, then no point of order will lie against the amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. The language of the present paragraph, that is the original law, to the extent that it makes this a revolving fund—does that make the paragraph of the bill itself subject to a point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was just going to say that a new suggestion is introduced, that the paragraph itself to which the amendment is proposed is subject to a point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the Chair please, the very act itself provides for a revolving fund of two and a half million dollars up to June 30, and that is all we do.

Mr. GOOD. But here we are appropriating $34,000,000 and making that available.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is the deficiency phase of it that makes it in order on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Where is the section to which the gentleman refers?

Mr. SHERLEY. The second paragraph of section 8 on page 2 of the act approved August 10, 1917.

The CHAIRMAN. Where is the language cited by the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. SHERLEY. The language is—

For procuring, storing, and furnishing seeds, as authorized by section 3 of this act, $2,500,000, and this fund may be used as a revolving fund until June 30, 1918.

If we have the right to appropriate it up to July 1 we have the right to appropriate for its reuse up to July 1. There is no limit under section 3 as to the amount that can be appropriated. The fact that we reappropriate it, but limit it always to July 1, keeps it within the rule.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Kentucky is right in that regard. I have examined the act, and I do not believe that anything can be claimed in regard to that matter; but I still insist that the amendment is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. Chairman. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment and to offer one which I think will be unobjectionable.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman send his amendment to the desk to be reported?

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Good: Page 76, line 4, after the word "eighteen," insert the following: "Provided, That no part of said sum shall be used for the purchase of seed of any kind except where there is a shortage of seed of such kind in the respective districts."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I shall not raise a point of order, but I want to be heard on the merits of the proposition.

The committee had from the Secretary of Agriculture a very full statement touching what was proposed to be done with the moneys that he had obtained and that he hopes to obtain. Perhaps there were some matters which we did not cover that we might have covered, but I submit to this House that not even as good a farmer as the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good] is in a position to know as well as the Secretary of Agriculture what the need is. Now, there may be, and frequently will be, cases in which there is need to supply seeds where there is not a shortage, because the determination of a shortage is a determination of the entire quantity of seeds over the country at large, whereas the determination of the need is by the act itself limited to restricted areas, and it is easily conceivable, and in point of fact is true, that there are places where there is great need, and yet there is no shortage in the kind of seeds. Take corn, for instance. There is great need of a certain character of corn to be had for planting in certain areas, but there is no shortage of corn for planting. You can find enough corn to plant. You might not find the kind of corn desired. But after all, laying aside those matters, what is the use of this House undertaking to quibble about this language? In the last analysis you have got to trust the intelligence and the patriotism and the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture and those who act under him, and it is folly to undertake to put language in here that may simply serve to hamper him, and which can not make a wise man out of him.

Mr. NORTON. Nobody questions his patriotism.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is not simply a question of patriotism, but it is a question of judgment. How are you by legislation going to give wisdom to men? If the Secretary of Agriculture has not wisdom enough to expend this money without this limitation he has not wisdom enough to spend it with the limitation, and everybody here knows that is the fact.

Now, the committee has tried to take a reasonable course between the extremes of this House, between men who wanted us to furnish seed free or to furnish it on credit, which would amount in many instances to furnishing it free, and some gentlemen who seem to object to seed being furnished because some of the seed is of a certain character and going to certain sections of the country. There is nothing in the appropriation that restricts the Secretary and compels him to buy peanuts. The plan as outlined is a tentative plan based upon information that the department has. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good] says there is no need for oats. I submit that the Secretary of Agriculture would not have submitted the table he has, touching the need of oats for planting, unless there was an actual need, and he is in a position to know more about it than the gentleman from Iowa. I say that with all proper respect for him. Now, let this committee be sensible in the legislation that we pass. We properly could determine questions of amount. The gentleman does not seek to limit the amount of money, but he seeks to put a limitation on the bill that will either be meaningless or will serve to handicap the Secretary in ways that can not now be foreseen, and that ought not to be adopted by the House.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I am very much surprised at one argument made by my friend from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], who is one of the most logical, if not the most logical, gentlemen in the House. He says that we ought to trust to the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture to make proper expenditures in this line, to give the Secretary authority to use this money wherever he will. If we followed that line of argument everywhere, we would not make anything but lump-sum appropriations.

Mr. SHERLEY. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I never said anything of the kind. There are limitations in the law, but the limitation the gentleman is trying to put on has no basis in reason.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am not inclined to agree with my friend on that point any more than I am on the other. Now, take the matter of oats. My colleague [Mr. Good] has shown that we have an abundance of oats in the country of the finest quality. There is no need of this appropriation unless there is actual shortage of seeds, and, as I say, there is an abundance of that seed in this country.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. Take an area of 20,000 square miles in Montana and Wyoming. There was not a bushel of oats raised in that section last year. Although there is a surplus in the country, might not there be an urgent need of oats in that restricted district?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. In one sense there might; but the farmers in my district need money. I need money myself. A Member at my side asks, "How much?" More than I get. But I know of no reason why the Treasury should supply that need.

Mr. NORTON. The trouble is that it is impossible for these people to get the seed there.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That ought to be taken care of in a different way. As far as that is concerned, it comes back to the same point. Here are farmers that need money; that is what they need instead of seed. The gentleman from Dakota says that that ought to be supplied out of the Treasury, and the argument of the gentleman from Kentucky comes to the same thing.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, he knows that the law provides that seeds shall be sold for cash, and the amendment provides that the seed shall not be supplied if there happens to be in the country at large enough seed for the needs of the country. One of the difficulties that exists to-day is getting the seed in time to certain localities, and the kind of seed needed, irrespective of the shortage or supply of the country at large.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the gentleman will permit me, I think I know something about the oats business, because I come from a section where they raise an enormous amount of them. I am very familiar with that subject, being from an agricultural section. I know there is plenty of good seed oats, if people have the cash to buy it.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNER. Might there not be in the locality mentioned by the gentleman from North Dakota a shortage of seed in that locality, and would it not be within the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture to supply that shortage under the terms of the amendment offered?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If there was a genuine shortage, it could be supplied under the terms of the amendment.

Mr. NORTON. The amendment does not provide for a shortage in any particular district; it says a shortage of that kind of seed.

Mr. TOWNER. That is true, but it would apply under the general terms of the act in a particular locality. It does not say a general shortage all over the country. If there is a shortage or need in any particular locality, it would authorize him to supply the shortage under the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. NORTON. I would not so interpret it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We can not, Mr. Chairman, trust these matters to the judgment of any man, except where we are compelled by war's emergencies. Especially is this true when reason and our own judgment point out limitations which should prevail. I hope the amendment of my colleague will be adopted.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, returning to the gentleman from Iowa the bouquet handed by him to the gentleman from Kentucky, and which he is entitled to, for there is no more logical gentleman on the floor of the House ordinarily, I do not catch the logic of the argument he just made. Of course somewhere in the country there are seeds; otherwise we would be in a very bad way, indeed.

This appropriation was originally made on the theory that there was not a proper distribution of seed; that there were large areas in which seed had not been grown and where seed was difficult to secure, and we loaned the credit of the Federal Government to the farmers for the purpose of securing seeds where seeds could be obtained and transporting them and selling them to the farmers where they were not to be had. That is the purpose of the legislation. Whether it was wise or necessary to do that is a matter of opinion.

But we assumed that it was necessary to do it, or we would not have done that thing. Now, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good], if I understand his amendment at all, would prevent the purchase and sale of seed if anywhere in the country there were seeds obtainable. He speaks about oats. Of course every farmer in Iowa ought every year to come to Wyoming or Montana to buy his seed in order to get good oats; not the light, fluffy stuff that grows down there, that a whiff of wind will carry beyond the barnyard out into the field. Our purpose of this legislation is to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to go into the regions where they really grow good solid oats that weigh 38 to 42 pounds to the struck bushel and take them into Iowa, where, I am told, they frequently grow oats that weigh about 20 or 25 pounds to the heaped bushel.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. The gentleman's statement regarding conditions in Iowa can—

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, well, I will make it Indiana; I do not see anyone from Indiana present. [Laughter.]

Mr. TOWNER. The gentleman's statement is a sufficient explanation.

Mr. MONDELL. I know that the gentleman from Iowa does not want to hamper the Secretary in utilizing this fund. It may be that the Secretary has not made as wise a distribution as we think he should have made of the money, but we hope in that case that the fault will be rectified under the new appropriation.

This ought to be amended so as to allow the Secretary to sell this seed to organizations that will guarantee the repayment of the money. That is what we ought to do, but if we are not to do that we at least should not hamper the Secretary. We ought to enable him to go into the regions where there are good seeds, where they are plentiful. For instance, as I said a moment ago, go into the mountainous part of Wyoming and get his oat seed.

Mr. GOOD. Can he get oats there now?

Mr. MONDELL. In some parts of that country they are short. We want a better distribution of them, and that is what is proposed under this bill. I am sure that any limitation would hamper the Secretary and would not secure the distribution that ought to be had.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Has the point of order been made?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate upon this amendment and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. GOOD. I should like to have five minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, we have already had an hour upon this.

Mr. GOOD. I have not had any time on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that debate upon this paragraph and all other amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment that I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then I move that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. MORGAN. I have an amendment that I desire to offer.

Mr. SHERLEY. That gives the gentleman five minutes for his amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. I would not like to be restricted in that way. Give me 10 minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon the paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, a good deal has been said about the logic of the statements of the gentlemen who have discussed this amendment. Permit me now to call the attention of the committee to the logic of the amendment. The amendment is as follows:

Provided, That no part of said sum shall be used for the purchase of seed of any kind except where there is a shortage of seed of such kind.

That is, no part of this sum can be used to purchase any seed in any place except where there is a shortage of seed. It seems to me the place to purchase seed by the Secretary of Agriculture would be a place where there is a surplus of seed rather than where there is a shortage. This amendment precludes him from purchasing any seed except in some place where he can find there is a shortage of seed of that particular kind. If that is logic in the amendment the committee can make the most of such logic by voting down the amendment. It is simply ridiculous as it now stands. What the gentleman who proposed the amendment probably wishes to accomplish is to provide that the seed shall only be allowed to be purchased by the Secretary of Agriculture when there is a shortage in certain restricted districts. The amendment as it now stands would preclude the Secretary from purchasing seed except in a place where there was a shortage of seed. As the amendment stands, of course it can not be and should not be accepted by the committee. If the amendment were to the effect that the provision should limit the Secretary to purchasing seed when there is a shortage, that should not be adopted unless it should limit the Secretary to purchasing seeds and supplying them when there is a shortage in a particular restricted district. That is exactly what the provision as it is in the bill would allow. It allows the Secretary to purchase the seed and to supply it where there is a need for it. The amendment should be defeated.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I shall ask to modify the amendment by adding in the words "in any restricted area," so that it will obviate all the objection made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY]. I do not wish to do a thing that will hamper or embarrass the Department of Agriculture. I have high regard for the Secretary of Agriculture, but I want to say that no Secretary of Agriculture could go into the details of administration of a fund of this kind, and the hearings show that the Secretary in administration of the fund relied upon some of the bureau chiefs with regard to all of these matters, and some of these bureau chiefs differed from him very materially in some of the matters that came before the committee. It is estimated here to use $750,000 with which to buy seed oats, and if the Secretary investigates the matter he will find that there is no shortage of seed oats. When this estimate was made it was made upon the basis of a dollar a bushel, when the market price of oats in Chicago at that time was about 54 cents. Does anyone think that the farmers of North Dakota or Montana are foolish enough to pay a dollar a bushel, the amount required here by this bill and the amount which the Secretary paid for oats when oats were selling for between 50 and 60 cents in the open market?

I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the amendment offered by Mr. Good, add the following: "In any restricted area," so that it will read:

Provided, That no part of said sum shall be used for the purchase of seed of any kind except where there is a shortage of seed of such kind in any restricted area."

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read:

Page 76, strike out the period after the word "eighteen" and insert a semicolon and the following:

Provided, That no portion of the amount herein appropriated shall be used except when seeds purchased thereby shall be sold to farmers upon credit."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. SHERLEY. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, as the point of order is reserved, I shall first make a few remarks with the idea that the amendment offered is in order. I do not think there is any question but that the amendment is in order.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman realizes that his time is running.

Mr. MORGAN. I am to have 10 minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. I thought the gentleman was undertaking to discuss the point of order.

Mr. MORGAN. I want time in which to discuss the point of order also.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then the gentleman would have 10 minutes additional. I am not willing that he should do that. I am willing to reserve the point of order for 10 minutes in order that he may discuss the merits of the proposition if he desires.

Mr. MORGAN. All right, thank you.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GARNER). The gentleman is recognized for 10 minutes and under the unanimous-consent agreement will occupy 10 minutes in the discussion of both the point of order and the merits of the amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. This provision in this bill appropriates $4,000,000. Under the so-called food-control act these funds must be used in selling seeds to farmers for cash. First, I wish to address a few words to the chairman in a discussion of the point of order. My amendment does not limit the amount of money expended, but does limit the purpose for which it may be used. In other words, under my amendment no portion of this $4,000,000 can be used except in selling seeds to farmers on credit. Now, the fact that my amendment may change the existing law does not make it subject to the point of order. For instance, I will read here from Hinds' Precedents, volume 4, page 639:

The question arose as to whether this is a limitation merely. If so, the amendment is in order. If not, it is out of order. It is maintained that this amendment changes existing law. In a sense every limitation changes existing law. If any specific condition is mentioned under which an appropriation is to be withheld, that is, pro tanto, a change of existing law, at least to the extent that the whole or a part of the appropriation can not be expended unless the condition is complied with.

Now, then, under my amendment not one single cent of this $4,000,000 can be used unless it is used to sell seeds to farmers on credit. The entire $4,000,000 might be saved to the Government. My amendment restricts or limits the use of money. Hence it is in order as a limitation. That has been ruled in many cases.

My amendment provides that no portion of the $4,000,000 appropriated under this paragraph shall be used except that which is used in the purchase of seeds to sell to the farmers on credit. This is clearly a limitation of the use of the money appropriated, and hence it is a limitation which is in order as an amendment to an appropriation bill. It may be said that my amendment changes existing law, and is therefore out of order. But I have quoted a decision from Hinds' Precedents, volume 4, page 639, which clearly points out the fact that every limitation changes existing law. My amendment is therefore not objectionable on the ground that it changes existing law. There are many authorities which might be cited sustaining my view of the proposition.

Assuming, therefore, that my amendment is not subject to a point of order, I wish to discuss somewhat the merits of my amendment. It is well to have in mind the history of this question. It came up when the food-survey bill was before Congress during the last session.

House bill 4188, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session, became a law August 10, 1917, and as introduced by Mr. Lever and as it passed the House, contained in section 4 of said bill the following paragraph:

That whenever the Secretary of Agriculture shall find that there is or may be a special need in any restricted area for seeds, suitable for the production of food or feed crops, he is authorized to purchase, grow, or otherwise procure such seed, to store them, and to furnish them, by sale or otherwise, to farmers on credit or other terms at cost, including the expense of packing and transportation.

The foregoing provision did not become a law. The provision was modified in the Senate as is found in the act which became a law in section 3 thereof, which is as follows:

That whenever the Secretary of Agriculture shall find that there is or may be a special need in any restricted area for seeds, suitable for the production of food or feed crops, he is authorized to purchase or contract with persons to grow such seeds, to store them, and to furnish them to farmers for cash, at cost, including the expense of packing and transportation.

For myself I was greatly disappointed that the Senate amended this bill limiting the Secretary of Agriculture in furnishing seed for farmers to sell for cash only. That, in my judgment, was a very grave mistake. I thought so then. Time has confirmed my original view.

The object of the law is expressed in its title, "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products. The food-control act, which was a companion measure to the food-survey act, was "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel." No one can read the titles to these bills without being impressed with the idea that one of the chief purposes of these bills was to stimulate and encourage the production of food products. This could be accomplished chiefly by two ways, namely, by increasing the acreage planted and by enlarging the yield per acre. In sections of the country where the farmers have had good crops there would be no demand for the Secretary of Agriculture to furnish seed to the farmers, either for cash or on credit. But it would be altogether different in any section of the country where there had been a failure of crops and where the farmers would not have the seed nor the cash to pay therefor, and could not command the credit necessary to purchase a sufficient amount of seed.

When the food-control bill was before the House I sought to have it amended so as to provide an ample fund to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to furnish the farmer seeds on credit. With this in view, as shown by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 22, 1917, page 4426, temporary binding, I offered the following amendment:

That, as a further means of stimulating the production of necessities, the President, in his discretion, is hereby authorized to loan to the farmers of the United States, through such governmental agencies as he shall direct, a sum of money not to exceed $50,000,000, upon such terms, conditions, and security, and at such rates of interest, as he shall prescribe, and which, in his judgment, shall be necessary to assure an adequate supply thereof, and the sum of $50,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and to be available immediately.

That amendment was ruled out of order. Whether that ruling was correct or not, it was certainly unfortunate that some provision was not made, either in the food-survey bill or in the food-control bill, whereby the farmers of the United States in drouth-stricken regions could not have been furnished seeds on credit at a low rate of interest.

It should be borne in mind that the Secretary of Agriculture already has a fund of $2,500,000 which he may use as a revolving fund in furnishing seeds to farmers for cash. This would appear to be ample capital for use of the Secretary of Agriculture so long as he does a seed business on a cash basis. I doubt the advisability of increasing the capital for this purpose when it appears to be ample already.

Furthermore, to increase the appropriation of funds to be used by the Secretary of Agriculture in selling seeds to the farmers for cash seems to be a species of deception to the farmers of the country. The word has gone forth that the appropriation to aid the farmers in purchasing seed is to be increased from $2,500,000 to $6,500,000. This is held out as a great favor to the farmers. But I do not so regard it. A farmer who can pay the Secretary of Agriculture cash for seed can pay cash to any dealer or any owner for such seeds. The poor farmer who has neither cash nor credit can not deal with the Secretary of Agriculture. The rich farmer, who has the cash, or who has credit, can purchase his seed from the Secretary of Agriculture. We are therefore helping the farmers who need no help, and we are refusing aid to those who need it. This is a wrong principle.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN. I will.

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand the gentleman wants to strike out this appropriation?

Mr. MORGAN. No, sir; not if I can get it properly amended; but I do not regard it of much value to the farmers or as a means of increasing food production. I do not want to be severe, but I look upon this proposition to sell seeds to farmers for cash as a proposition wholly without merit. When we sell for cash, we are doing no more than any dealer will do.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, well, does not the gentleman know it is not sold for cash alone but also at cost. That is not what the profiteer would do. [Applause.]

Mr. MORGAN. Well, there might be a slight advantage there, but the advantage will go only to rich and well-to-do farmers who do not need it. More than that, the Secretary must go into the market and buy his seeds from dealers; he must pay the market price; dealers can buy them as cheap as he can. The farmers will save little through purchasing from the Secretary.

I do not want to be critical, but, in my honest judgment, this provision is worthless to the farmers of the United States. Now, I think my amendment is in order. If it is adopted it would perhaps save all of this $4,000,000, and it should be saved unless it can be used in some way that would benefit the farmers of the United States, who need the help, not the rich farmers, not the farmers who have the cash to pay, but the farmers who are poor and needy. Last season out in western Kansas, Nebraska, and Oklahoma the farmers wanted seed wheat. Their wheat had been a failure. They had no seed. They had no money. The local banks had not the means to finance them. Seeding a wheat crop is an expensive proposition. The Secretary of Agriculture could not help them. He could sell only for cash. For months our farmers were appealing for help. So today, in the spring-wheat States, the farmers in many localities have not the cash to buy seed wheat. We know the need of an increased production of wheat in 1918. But the National Government refuses to help these farmers to secure seed on credit. It is a mistake. It is poor policy. If the farmers of the winter-wheat States could have purchased seed wheat on credit last fall, millions of additional acres of wheat would now be growing in the fields. If the Federal Government will now furnish the farmers in the spring-wheat States seed wheat on terms or credit, the acreage in wheat will be largely increased and millions of additional bushels of wheat will be produced.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MONDELL offers the following amendment: Page 76, line 3, after the comma, strike out the figures "$4,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,999,000, and the seeds purchased hereunder may be sold for cash at cost or on credit with approved security of responsible organization guaranteeing repayment and assuming the expense of distributing the seeds amongst the farmers."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be heard on the point of order. I am opposed to the amendment; but a few minutes ago, when this act of August 10, 1917, was discussed, I find I was in error when I made the statement that the provisions of this appropriation, providing that it shall be used as a revolving fund until June 30, 1918, were in order. Now, if the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] will look at the act—

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, all debate except on the point of order is ended.

Mr. GOOD. I am talking about the point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, all right. I did not so understand the gentleman.

Mr. GOOD. The act of August 10, 1917, provides in section 3 that—

Whenever the Secretary of Agriculture shall find there is or may be a special need in any restricted area for seed suitable for the production of food or feed crops, he is authorized to contract with persons to grow such seeds, to store them, and to furnish them to farmers for cash, at a cost including the expense of packing and transportation.

That ends the provision so far as the permanent law is concerned. Now, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] referred to section 8 of the same act, but section 8 was an appropriation and enlarged the provision of law found in section 3. It enlarged the provisions of section 3 and it died with that provision. Is it possible that if this Congress should pass an appropriation unauthorized, or add to an appropriation and use language by which we enlarged existing law, that in all succeeding Congresses it would be in order to offer appropriations carrying the enlarged provisions? Nowhere in the permanent law is there a provision for a revolving fund, but when the Congress considered that appropriation later on it added to the provisions of section 3. So when we put in this provision, which may be used as a revolving fund until June 30, 1918, we did enlarge upon the provisions of the act to which I have referred. The provisions, so far as they refer to that act, were only for that fund and for no other fund, for that specific appropriation, and that appropriation went further than the provisions of the law giving the Secretary of Agriculture the right to create this fund and to purchase these seeds. I suggest, therefore, to the Chair that the whole provision that we have been discussing is subject to a point of order and, being subject to a point of order and the point not having been made, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming is in order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the argument made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good] is sound; but, further, the amendment is not subject to a point of order, because it comes clearly under the Holman rule. I offered an amendment a short time ago which came under the Holman rule, under some rather extreme decisions that have been rendered under that rule, decisions that I have not approved, but decisions which would have warranted a favorable decision on the amendment I then offered. I did not urge them because I think there is danger of going far afield under the Holman rule. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] objected to that amendment, because while I did reduce the amount carried in the bill the additional language did not relate directly to the reduction and did not of itself retrench expenditure.

Now, if the chairman will listen to me, I will point out to him the difference between that amendment and this one.

This amendment comes under the Holman rule, first, because it actually reduces the amount of money in this bill; second, because it reduces expenditures under the bill by providing that when these seeds are sold on credit they are to be upon the security of organizations that guarantee the repayment and bear the expense of distributing the seeds. Clearly my amendment not only reduces the amount of money carried in the bill, but it would further retrench expenditures whenever the seeds were sold on credit. If the seeds are sold for cash, matters would stand as they now do in the bill; but if they were sold on credit there would be a retrenchment of expenditures, because the department would be relieved of the expense of distributing the seeds. The organizations I have in mind and have proposed are organizations in the county seats, let us say, of the counties, of farmers and bankers, of stockmen and business men, who guarantee repayment, and who themselves take the responsibility of seeing that the seeds are distributed.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman permit a question there?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. If no provision was made for the seeds to be sold on credit and there could be no retrenchments?

Mr. MONDELL. If no—

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, your amendment provides only for retrenchment in case they are sold on credit?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes. That part of my amendment which reduces the amount brings it under the Holman rule. The balance follows and is connected with it and in itself reduces expenditures.

As a matter of fact, the amendment as I offered it would be in order if it did not reduce the appropriation carried in the bill a dollar, because the additional provision in itself would retrench expenditures by providing that if these seeds were sold on credit they must be sold on the credit of an organization which would distribute the seeds. That would reduce expenditures by shifting the work of distribution of the seeds. It is clearly not subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky desire to be heard?

Mr. SHERLEY. Just a word. There are two positions taken by the two distinguished gentlemen. One is that the original paragraph being subject to a point of order, and no point of order having been made against it, any amendment germane to it is in order. The answer to that is a denial of the premises, and I deny that the original proposition as contained in the bill is subject to a point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not take that attitude.

Mr. SHERLEY. The language of the law on which all of this is based is found not only in paragraph 3, but in the so-called food-survey law in its entirety. In section 8 there is a provision carrying $2,500,000 as a revolving fund for the fiscal year 1918.

Now, the gentleman from Iowa temporarily forgot that this is a deficiency bill to supply additional money where moneys already supplied are not sufficient. To say that where $2,500,000 were supplied as a revolving fund for this purpose it would not be in order to increase for the same purpose as a revolving sum that amount is simply to say that no deficiency is in order on a deficiency bill.

Now, touching the argument of the distinguished gentleman from Wyoming—

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. GOOD. Then, following that line of argument, I suppose the gentleman would say that the words of the provision here which provides for a revolving fund are surplusage, and the money can be used as a revolving fund as a deficiency under that?

Mr. SHERLEY. Whether surplusage or not, they do not change or enlarge the scope of the previous appropriation at all.

Now, touching the point made by the distinguished gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], the language of his amendment is this: He reduces the appropriation by $1,000 instead of $1, and then provides that "the seed purchased hereunder may be sold for cash at cost or on credit with approved security of responsible organizations guaranteeing repayment and assuming the expense of distributing the seeds among the farmers," and then he makes this assumption, that inasmuch as he provides for securing the value of the seeds that are sold on credit, he is thereby safeguarding the Treasury. That would be true if—

Mr. MONDELL. I did not understand the gentleman's statement.

Mr. SHERLEY. That would be true if we were now going to sell on credit without any safeguarding, but in point of fact we are not going to sell on credit at all. The mistake which the gentleman falls into is in assuming that the reduction of an appropriation in any amount is sufficient to enable you to put in any legislative provision you want under the Holman rule, whereas, as I stated a while ago to another occupant of the Chair on another amendment offered by the gentleman, this is the real rule and should be borne in mind, that to come within the Holman rule the language which is submitted and which is a change of existing law must of itself be such as to result in a reduction of expenditure.

Mr. MONDELL. And that is exactly what my amendment does.

Mr. SHERLEY. No. The reduction of expenditures comes by virtue of reducing the amount, but not by virtue of the legislation you tack on afterwards, and that is a distinction that is as wide as a barn door.

Mr. MONDELL. I beg the gentleman's pardon. That is exactly what it does do. There is to be no loan unless there is to be a saving to the Treasury through distribution by the organizations that guarantee the loans. Surely there is a saving there.

Mr. SHERLEY. No. The saving that comes to the Treasury, if any, comes—and, of course, in point of fact, there would not be—but assuming that—

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman would not say that the distribution of the seeds would not cost the Government anything?

Mr. SHERLEY. Under the paragraph as originally presented $4,000,000 was appropriated. Under it as proposed by the gentleman there is to be $3,999,000 appropriated. That is the extent of the saving. All your limitation after that has nothing to do with the saving.

Mr. MONDELL. On the contrary, Mr. Chairman, if the Chair will allow me, the item would be in order. In my opinion, if there was not a reduction in the amount of the appropriation, because of itself it contemplates a retrenchment in expenditures. The law now provides for the sale of these seeds for cash. There is a change of law authorizing their sale on credit, and providing they are sold on credit with the security of organizations that not only guarantee the return of the money, but assume all of the expense of distributing the seed. In other words instead of the Secretary going to the expense of distributing $10,000 worth of seed among 500 farmers, this association assumes all that cost. There is a retrenchment, clearly a retrenchment. We have organizations in our country that do that very thing. They guarantee the repayment from the farmers, distribute the seeds among them, and collect the money.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Commercial attachés. To enable the Secretary of Commerce, in his discretion and in accordance with such regulations as he may prescribe, to make special allowances during the balance of the present fiscal year by way of additional compensation to officers and employees of the commercial attaché service, in order to adjust their official income to the ascertained cost of living at the posts to which they may be assigned, $9,000.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask how many commercial attachés we have?

Mr. SHERLEY. There are 11, I think.

Mr. FLOOD. What salaries do they get?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does not the distinguished gentleman, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, know?

Mr. SHERLEY. The one at Buenos Aires gets $8,000; the one at Copenhagen, $5,000; at Lima, $4,500; London, $5,000; Melbourne, $4,500; Paris, $5,000; Petrograd, $6,000; Peking, $6,000; Rio de Janeiro, $5,000; Tokio, $5,000; The Hague, $3,500.

Mr. FLOOD. I suppose this item is to supplement the salary of those 11 officers.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is to do for these men exactly what we did for the gentlemen attached to the diplomatic and consular offices of the Government abroad, after consulting with the representatives of those departments.

Mr. FLOOD. I think it is very proper, owing to the increased cost of living and the high price of exchange, to make this allowance, and I shall not make the point of order, though the item is subject to a point of order, as the gentleman from Kentucky will admit. But I do not think that these attachés ought to be under the supervision and control of the Department of Commerce. It results in a duplication of work and in a lessening of the value that these attachés would otherwise be to the commerce of this country. At the proper time I want to make a suggestion to the House with reference to this matter and show that our entire foreign service should be under one department of the Government, and that the State Department, the branch of our Government through which the United States speaks in its relations with other governments.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD. I will.

Mr. ROGERS. Has the gentleman any information as to how the salaries of the State Department officers with respect to post allowances compare with the salaries of these commercial attachés, as just read by the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. FLOOD. I do not know, because I do not know what post allowances were given to the Department of Commerce for the benefit of these attachés for the other part of this year; that is, the part of the fiscal year other than that which is to run between now and the 1st of July. Can the gentleman from Kentucky tell us if this is the first post allowance that they have had?

Mr. SHERLEY. This is the first allowance that has been made to these commercial attachés.

Mr. FLOOD. I do not think it would be as large a per cent as the Diplomatic and Consular representatives received under the post-allowance fund of the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill.

Mr. ROGERS. Is it not probably true that the salaries of these commercial attachés are higher than the salaries of the officers in the State Department, whom the State Department think it is necessary to aid by giving them a post allowance?

Mr. FLOOD. Oh, yes; very much higher. I do not think there are any diplomatic and consular officers who get this post allowance who have as large salaries as some of these commercial attachés.

Mr. SHERLEY. There are 10 clerks in addition to these 11 attachés.

Mr. FLOOD. They get $1,500 a year.

Mr. ROGERS. Is this $9,000 apportioned among the clerks as well as the attachés?

Mr. SHERLEY. That is as I understand it.

Mr. ROGERS. The appropriation for the force of commercial attachés is $100,000, is it not?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think that is correct.

Mr. FLOOD. It is $100,000.

Mr. ROGERS. Is a portion of that sum expended for expenses of the officers themselves?

Mr. SHERLEY. For office rent, traveling expenses, and so forth.

Mr. ROGERS. But not for living expenses in any case?

Mr. SHERLEY. No, sir.

Mr. FLOOD. These attachés should be a part of our foreign service under the jurisdiction and control of the Secretary of State. This has been so ever since they were created and is more so now than ever, and will become more so than now after the war is over and our tremendously developed commercial interests have to be fostered and protected.

Here are 11 foreign agents, and there should be more of them, who should be the commercial experts of our embassies and legations and important advisers of the Secretary of State, owing their appointments and making their reports, without any reference to the embassies and legations or the Secretary of State, but to a department of the Government which should confine its activities to our domestic commerce.

The war has changed the entire nature of the functions to be performed by the Department of State and the Department of Commerce in relation to foreign trade and brought it back to what it was intended to be by the founders of our Government.

Owing to the necessarily close relationship between the commercial and political questions involved in international trade few transactions of importance in a governmental way are concluded independently of the direct or indirect aid of the Department of State.

The entire export and import trade of the country is under the control of the War Trade Board, the chairman of which, the Hon. Vance C. McCormick, is the representative of the Secretary of State on that board.

The action of that body is creating day by day conditions that must be dealt with by the Department of State through the diplomatic corps in Washington and through our embassies, legations, and consulates abroad. The most important and necessary treatment of these questions is diplomatic and a function of the State Department, and can not be otherwise. Anyone who has any dealings with these matters must understand this.

It is generally conceded that the free play of economic forces after the war will lead to economic disturbances and in many places to economic failure. These conditions will apply to foreign countries all over the world and will call for the intervention of the Department of State and under its direction of the diplomatic and consular offices in foreign countries.

The problems of international commerce have ceased to be, and will probably not again for many years be primarily functions of a domestic department of the Government. Each and everyone will henceforth, as it is now, be interwoven with the political relations of the United States with foreign nations.

It seems important, therefore, first, that the Department of State should be enlarged to meet the requirements of the changed conditions, and to make it possible to give adequate and intelligent attention to the political interests of the United States in future international relations and to the problems of individual Americans, and to give adequate and expert attention to all commercial questions having a political bearing.

We already have an administrative organization in the department, and political divisions, charged with the duty of studying and dealing with the political relations of the United States and foreign nations, but we have not a sufficient provision for handling the commercial functions with which that department will of necessity be charged after the war ends. This provision should be made and this need supplied. We should begin by transferring these attachés to the Department of State and coordinating all of our foreign activities.

Germany, Austria, France, Italy, and Great Britain have been for months making careful preparations for trade after the war. In Great Britain several officers are studying Austria, others are studying the Balkan States and the Ottoman Empire, Italy, Russia, and other States in the most exhaustive manner.

The United States should act promptly in this matter through the State Department under its Bureau of Trade Advisors, to which end it should greatly increase and enlarge this bureau, and enable it to do this work so that America and Americans will not neglect the opportunities that will come to us after the war.

Second, the foreign agents of the United States must be placed under the control of the department of Government through which the United States speaks in its relations with other nations.

We have heretofore had a body of agents abroad representing various departments—Treasury, War, Navy, Agriculture, Commerce, and Labor. The agents of the War, Navy, and Labor Departments have been attached to, and, in most cases, have not conflicted with, the embassies, legations, and consulates. The agents of the Treasury and Agriculture have, as a rule, not been attached to diplomatic and consular offices, and the results have not, as I am informed, been very satisfactory.

The commercial attachés of the Department of Commerce, while attached to the embassies and legations, have of necessity had to deal with subjects which were interwoven with the daily work of the embassies and legations, and conflicts of jurisdiction and opinion have been unavoidable. I believe they have resulted in confusion and trouble; overlapping of functions, and duplications of work have been frequent. I learn that attachés have often been engaged upon work which might better have been done by consuls, when other work of the embassies of the highest commercial importance remained undone because of the lack of control of the attaché on the part of the ambassador. On the other hand, attachés have sent home political reports not through the State Department, and of which, I presume, the Secretary of State had no knowledge.

A divided control of activity in the foreign field ought no longer be permitted, because successful relations, political and commercial, require concentrated, systematic effort, which can be secured by having only one directing force at home. This is the course followed by Great Britain, France, Japan, Germany, and other great commercial countries.

Each embassy, legation, and consulate should be made a center of activity not only for gathering information and administering American laws but also for making the local people understand the ideals, motives, abilities, and resources of the United States.

The commercial attaché should be the commercial expert of the embassy or legation dealing with matters of important commercial policy and tendency, the adviser of the ambassador on all commercial subjects, and the aid of the Secretary of State in averting governmental activities of a commercial nature unfavorable to the United States. No commercial attaché can be made of much value except he be made the spokesman of the ambassador, and no head of an embassy will assume responsibility for members of the embassy staff who are not under his own direction and that of the department of which he is a member.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Military research: To enable the Bureau of Standards to cooperate with the War and Navy Departments by providing the scientific assistance necessary in the development of instruments, devices, and materials, and the standardization and testing of supplies, including personal services and rental of quarters in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; the erection of temporary structures; books of reference and periodicals; and all other necessary items not included in the foregoing, $250,000, to continue available during the fiscal year 1919.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the House to the exceedingly valuable services that are being rendered by the Bureau of Standards. I think there is no other bureau of the Government that is now rendering any more valuable service to the Government in the war preparations than is the Bureau of Standards. It would not be possible for me now to take the time to call the attention of the House to the many ways in which the Bureau of Standards has been assisting in the war work. As an illustration, let me call attention to what they have been doing in aid of aero construction, the determination of standards and types, and the general work of preparing our air service. Their assistance has been exceedingly valuable in almost every stage of the work. In the developments and modifications that have been made of the liberty motor, and especially in the development of the materials that are to be used in the manufacture of aircraft, the Bureau of Standards has rendered invaluable service. It was supposed that mahogany was the only wood which could be used for the construction of propeller blades. By the work of the Bureau of Standards the fact has been developed that a good many of our native woods may be used, upon proper tests, so that we shall have no difficulty in finding within the confines of our own country all the necessary materials for that purpose. It was supposed that nothing except linen could be used for the covering of the wings. It has been determined by experiments made by the Bureau of Standards that cotton may be made almost, if not entirely, equal to linen for this purpose if properly prepared. So I might call attention to a great many things that the Bureau of Standards is doing.

If this appropriation is made, it will enable the Bureau of Standards to cooperate with the War and Navy Departments in their work in many regards.

Mr. Chairman, the whole subject of the bringing together of the various forces of the Government in our war work is, of course, now of pressing and vital importance. So many propositions have been placed before the people and before Congress for the reorganization of the various departments, for their consolidation, for the taking away from the President of his power as Chief Executive of the United States and as Commander in Chief of our Armies and Navies—a proposition which I think is absolutely unconstitutional—that this subject of the bringing together of the executive powers of the Nation and of all our industrial and productive forces to the prosecution of the war is, of course, primarily and immediately the great duty of Congress. That subject I desire to discuss somewhat in detail.

A WAR CABINET.

Mr. Chairman, the proposal to establish by act of Congress a superior war council or war cabinet to direct the war is so revolutionary and would effect such a radical departure from our present constitutional system as to demand most serious consideration. It is my belief, first, that the proposition in the form presented is unconstitutional; second, that it is unnecessary and unwise.

EXECUTIVE POWER OF THE PRESIDENT.

The Constitution provides, Article XI, section 1, paragraph 1: The executive power shall be vested in a President.

The President is the sole possessor of what the Constitution describes as the executive power. Congress may confer upon heads of departments, upon Secretaries whom we denominate members of the President's Cabinet, certain administrative and executive duties, but these are recognized as being subordinate to the supreme power of the President, and are to be exercised under his direction and control.

Thus in the act of Congress establishing the War Department it is provided:

The Secretary of War shall perform such duties as shall from time to time be enjoined on or intrusted to him by the President relative to military commissions, the military forces, the warlike stores of the United States, or to other matters respecting military affairs; and he shall conduct the business of the department in such manner as the President shall direct.

In the act establishing the Department of the Navy it is provided:

The Secretary of the Navy shall execute such orders as he shall receive from the President relative to the procurement of naval stores and materials, and the construction, armament, equipment, and employment of vessels of war, as well as all other matters connected with the Naval Establishment.

It will be observed that in these grants of power to the heads of departments Congress has been careful not to impinge in the slightest degree upon the supreme executive authority of the President. The Secretary of War shall perform such duties as the President shall intrust to him, and in the manner the President shall direct. The Secretary of the Navy shall execute such orders as he shall receive from the President.

The heads of the departments are thus made the assistants, the aids of the President. They are not granted original or plenary power. To the various departments are committed the several kinds of administrative activities. But Congress has never sought to divest the President of his supreme executive authority or to confer upon any individual, or department, or "Cabinet" any part of the constitutional executive prerogatives. Congress may say, and does say, that to a certain department shall be committed the consideration of a certain class of related administrative matters, and as the aid and assistant of the President, who is the sole source of the executive authority and the final arbiter of all executive controversies, the head of such department may exercise certain subordinate executive functions. But Congress has never sought to confer supreme or original executive authority upon any individual, or department, or "Cabinet."

Congress has created from time to time, as they were needed, the executive departments of the Government. It has transferred part of the functions of one department to another. It has taken parts from several existing departments and committed such parts to a new department which it created. All this is necessary and proper. Indeed, it is the accepted and orderly procedure, which has never been contested or challenged.

But the proposition now engaging public attention is far different. It assumes that Congress has the control and management of the executive functions of the Government, which the Constitution has committed to the President, and without changing the Constitution it proposes to divest the President of a large part of his executive authority and confer it upon a new body unknown to our Constitution and hitherto unknown to our laws. It also proposes to divest the President of his control of the heads of departments and confer such control upon the new "superior war cabinet."

The Constitution does not provide for a cabinet. It refers to "executive departments," and assigns duties to the "heads of departments." It also gives the President authority to require of these "heads of departments" "opinions in writing." Thus inferentially the Constitution recognizes the exercise of subordinate executive functions by the "heads of departments." But Executive authority is not conferred upon them. It is exercised in subordination to and under the direction of the President, upon whom alone all Executive power is conferred. The Constitution also recognized the advisory duties of the heads of departments, and in this capacity that they shall constitute what we term the President's Cabinet. But that in still larger measure is dependent on the President for its existence and activity. The heads of departments may or may not be the President's advisers. The President is not obliged to consult them. If he asks for their advice and they give it, he is not compelled to follow their advice. He may consult them when he desires so to do, and only then. He is compelled to hold no Cabinet meetings, and he may consult with any one or any number, or all of his Cabinet, as he shall determine. He is not limited to the members of the Cabinet for his advisers; he may consult with anyone he chooses, and he may act on such advice as against the advice of the entire Cabinet if he shall so determine.

The supremacy of the President in the exercise of Executive authority over any power that can be conferred by Congress on heads of departments or others has been many times upheld by the courts. Thus it was held in Wilcox v. Jackson (13 Pet., 498), that the President speaks and acts through the heads of departments in reference to the business committed to them. To the same effect is United States v. Cutler (2 Curt., C. Cls., 617); Lockington v. Smith (Pet., C. Cls., 466). Congress may impose independent duties upon heads of departments when not repugnant and only to the extent that they are not repugnant to the supreme executive authority conferred by the Constitution on the President. (Kendall v. United States, 12 Pet., 524.)

Cooley, in his great work on constitutional limitations, says:

There would be this clear limitation upon the power of the legislature to prescribe rules for the executive department; that they must not be such as under pretense of regulation divest the Executive of, or preclude his exercising any of his constitutional prerogatives or powers. Those matters which the Constitution specifically confides to him the legislature can not directly or indirectly take from his control.

It would be within the jurisdiction of Congress to withdraw powers already conferred upon the head of a department. It could confer upon any or all of them additional powers subordinate to the President. But it can not under the guise of coordinating executive powers grant to a body which it creates powers superior to the powers of the President or take from him any of the powers conferred upon him by the Constitution.

POWERS OF THE PRESIDENT AS COMMANDER IN CHIEF.

The Constitution provides, Article XI, section 2, paragraph 1: The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States.

The directness and simplicity of this provision of the Constitution leaves nothing to speculation or conjecture. On the President is conferred all the powers of control and direction of both the Army and Navy. Congress may declare war, but the President wages war. Congress may "raise and support armies," it may "provide and maintain a navy," but it can not command them. The power of the President as supreme commander is independent and absolute.

Mr. Chief Justice Chase well and clearly expressed the line of demarcation between the powers of the President and of Congress in military affairs in Ex parte Milligan (4 Wall., 2):

Congress has the power not only to raise and support and govern armies but to declare war. It has, therefore, the power to provide by law for carrying on war. This power necessarily extends to all legislation essential to the prosecution of war with vigor and success, except such as interferes with the command of forces and the conduct of campaigns. That power and duty belong to the President as Commander in Chief. The power to make the necessary laws is in Congress; the power to execute is in the President. Both powers imply many subordinate and auxiliary powers. Each includes all authority essential to its due exercise. But neither can the President, in war more than in peace, intrude upon the proper authority of Congress nor Congress upon the proper authority of the President. Both are servants of the people, whose will is expressed in the fundamental law.

Mr. Willoughby, in his late work on the Constitution, says:

Through or under the orders of the President all military operations in times of peace as well as of war are conducted. He has within his control the disposition of troops, the direction of vessels of war, and the planning and execution of campaigns.

With Congress lies the authority to lay down the rules governing the organization and maintenance of the military forces, the determination of their number, the fixing of the manner in which they shall be armed and equipped, the establishment of forts, hospitals, arsenals, etc., and the voting of appropriations for all military purposes.

To the same effect speaks Von Holst in his work on constitutional law:

In war the entire technical direction of affairs is incumbent upon the President. Congress has only to decide whether there shall be war and what means it will grant the President with which to conduct the war; but how the war declared by Congress shall be conducted by the means granted by it is the exclusive affair of the President. Congress may criticize, may express wishes, may pass resolutions, but it can prescribe absolutely nothing to the President, even though his acts and omissions be fraught with political consequences of the most pre-eminent importance.

It was held in Swain v. United States (28 C. Cls., 173) that the constitutional power of the President to command the Army and Navy and that of Congress "to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces" are distinct. Congress can not by rules and regulations impair the authority of the President as Commander in Chief.

SUPREME AUTHORITY CAN NOT BE GIVEN A WAR CABINET.

It is proposed and earnestly advocated in the press and elsewhere to establish a "superior war council," to which shall be committed the conduct of the war. It is to be above the Cabinet, and to it is to be committed much of the power of the President. There is need, it is said, of a central control in order to secure unity of action. To secure this the control now vested in the President and his Cabinet is to be transferred to the new "war cabinet," and the President is to be "relieved" of most of his powers as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. Legislation is proposed to create a "war cabinet" to be composed of "three distinguished citizens of demonstrated executive ability." This "war cabinet" shall have authority to "consider, devise, and formulate plans and policies, general and special, for the effectual conduct and vigorous prosecution of the war." It is also given authority "to direct and procure the execution of the same." It is also given power to "direct and control" all "executive departments, officials, and agencies of the Government" in so far as may be necessary, in its judgment, "for the effectual conduct and vigorous prosecution of the existing war." By this simple procedure the President and Cabinet are relegated to the rear and the "war cabinet" is to assume supreme command.

It would seem that the mere statement of the scheme would show how impossible it would be of enactment or of operation.

The proposal is to create an executive body which shall have supreme executive authority. The Constitution provides: "The executive power shall be vested in a President." The proposal is to give authority to the newly created "war cabinet" to formulate "plans and policies" to carry on the war, and "to direct and procure the execution of the same." The Constitution provides: "The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy." The proposal is to give the "war cabinet" power to "direct and control" all the executive departments. The Supreme Court of the United States declares that the President speaks and acts through the heads of departments. It is declared that in order to secure a "central control" and unity of action the conduct of the war should be committed to three persons rather than to one. Justice Story in his Commentaries on the Constitution says:

Of all the cases and concerns of government, the direction of war most peculiarly demands those qualities which distinguish the exercise of power by a single hand. Unity of plan, promptitude, activity, and decision are indispensable to success, and these can scarcely exist except where a single magistrate is intrusted exclusively with the power. Even the coupling of the authority of an executive council with him in the exercise of such powers enfeebles the system, divides the responsibility, and not infrequently defeats every energetic measure.

It is entirely unnecessary to quote this apt and authoritative statement in order to convince the American people of the excellence of their present constitutional system. The history of the Nation throughout 129 years of eventful and glorious experience under it is a sufficient answer to the proposal that it should now be revolutionized and overthrown. It does not need technical knowledge nor even a particular study of our fundamental law to show that the proposition both in spirit and letter is unconstitutional. The avowed purpose, the central idea of the proposal, is in contravention of the Constitution. In its provisions and by its terms it violates the Constitution. As suggested by the press and as proposed in legislation it is unconstitutional.

A "NEW WAR CABINET" UNNECESSARY.

Never before has any serious attempt been made to substitute a new cabinet to control the present Cabinet. Never before has it been proposed to take from the President the direct control of the heads of departments. If merely a change in the personnel of the present Cabinet is desired, that can be secured without creating a new body. It is proposed that the President shall appoint the new cabinet; he may change the present one. He may dismiss peremptorily any or all of his present Cabinet and appoint any whom he may select to fill their places. It is entirely unnecessary, therefore, to create a new Cabinet because of dissatisfaction with the personnel of the present Cabinet.

I have endeavored to show that Congress has no power to usurp or transfer the prerogatives of the President as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. Under existing conditions the President, as Commander in Chief, may be and should be in constant communication and consultation with the General Staff and the war chiefs of both the Army and Navy, as well as with the heads of those departments. He is thus placed in close touch with the technical war work—the planning of campaigns, the movements of troops and ships, the assignment of units, and all those matters which he must consider as Supreme Commander of the Nation's forces on land and sea. The relation for consultation and advice between the President and the Army and Navy is maintained by direct contact between the President and the General Staff and the heads of military departments. To attempt to create an intermediary body which shall be given power to control and direct both the operations of the Army and Navy, and the activities of the departments is clearly unconstitutional. It is also unwise and unnecessary.

NEW DEPARTMENTS.

The tremendous expansion of the activities of the Government occasioned by the war demands a corresponding enlargement of governmental machinery. Our present system provides for such enlargement without changing our form of government. Whenever the growth of the Nation and the increase of governmental activities have required we have created new departments of the Government. We started with 3, we now have 10. Departments have been added from time to time to keep pace with the development of the country. Additions are made whenever the existing machinery is inadequate to meet the increased requirements for effective administration. In this way the demands of 100,000,000 people have been as easily and satisfactorily met as were the demands of 3,000,000. In this way not only ordinary requirements but extraordinary requirements can be satisfied without violating the Constitution or abandoning our normal and safe procedure. If because of the war our governmental activities have so increased that the present departments can not satisfactorily and with the desired efficiency meet existing demands, new departments should be added. These new departments need not be continued for longer than the war, if they shall be no longer required. There is no reason why, being established to meet an emergency, they should not be abolished when the emergency shall cease to exist.

A DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORTATION.

There should be established a department of transportation, with a Secretary, who shall be a member of the President's Cabinet. Perhaps such legislation should not be enacted at this time, because of the President's action in taking over the railroads and the appointment of a director. But conditions thus created are necessarily temporary and legislation will soon be required. The immense importance of transportation by land and sea and the intimate relation it has with all governmental activities in the prosecution of the war require that the chief of this great branch of the Government service shall be the head of a department with the necessary authority and a seat in the Cabinet.

It would appear that the time has come when the department of transportation should be established, not only to meet the demands occasioned by the war but as a permanent departmental establishment of the Government. Transportation, including steam and electric railways, conveying both passengers and freight; steamboat and barge traffic in our rivers, lakes, and canals; shipping of all kinds, engaged in both the coastwise trade and in foreign commerce, requires coordination and governmental supervision and control of the highest character and with power and responsibility such as can only be obtained by placing such supervision and control in a department of the Government. If the railroads should be returned at the close of the war to their former status, their relation to the Government which will have been established during the war will be so close and the responsibilities which will have been assumed by the Government so large as to require a separate department. If Government ownership, in whole or in part, shall be instituted at the close of the war, the demand for departmental control will be imperative. In any event, it is time the United States should do as other great nations have done—make transportation one of the great administrative departments of the Government.

DEPARTMENT OF MUNITIONS.

There also should be established a department of munitions, with a secretary who shall be a member of the President's Cabinet. This department should be established at once, and should go out of existence at the close of the war. There are at least two reasons why the present departments have been found inadequate to meet expectations and secure the degree of celerity and efficiency demanded by the present crisis. One reason is that the requirements for increased service have been so tremendous that the present organization of the departments have been overwhelmed with the pressure. We have been so confident in our fancied security that no preparations for a large Military Establishment have been made. Neither have we even gone so far as to provide for an enlargement to meet a possible contingency or a great emergency. For this all parties, all Government officials, and the people themselves are responsible.

To meet the unexpected and unprepared-for emergency the administration has put forth its utmost efforts. It has a really creditable record of accomplishment when the defects of the system are considered. The blame, if blame is merited, attached because of a failure to realize the inadequacy of our present system to meet the emergency and a want of readiness to admit that deficiency and to take prompt and effectual measures to remedy the defect. It will not help matters, however, to propose and insist on unconstitutional methods of remedy. Neither shall we accomplish what we all desire—a reorganization that will secure efficiency—if we merely protest and complain. Constructive criticism is of value, but mere faultfinding will not help, but harm.

The other reason for the failure to reach expectations is that we have not realized that preparation for war is of two kinds, one military and the other pure business; and that to commit the business of preparation to military men is as unfortunate as it would be to commit military operations to business men. In peace times it was possible to leave the organization and management of our Military Establishment in the hands exclusively of the officers of the Army and Navy. Among them could be found men with sufficient business capacity to care for the limited business concerns of the departments. But when war came and with it the demand for the speedy arming and equipment of millions of men, the business part of the organizations grew to such enormous proportions as to be beyond the capacity of the officers to properly and expeditiously handle. They were not educated for business, they were educated for war. They had selected military not business careers. They had been commissioned because of military ability, not because of business capacity. Some of them have developed unexpected business facility, but there is not enough of those thus endowed. It has been found that the undertaking is too large for the equipment.

How large that undertaking is we have been slow to realize. To fully clothe and equip 2,000,000 men for modern warfare, to send them 3,000 miles across the sea, and to maintain them there till victory shall come is a task never before even contemplated by any nation in the world. To accomplish it will require the organized and mobilized productive and industrial capacity of all our 100,000,000 of people. We must bring production to an unprecedented volume in every line of agriculture, of mining, and of manufacture. We must bring all our transportation systems under a unified and nationalized control. We must tender to the Government the entire activities of the country, systematized and made effective, if we would win the war.

Great Britain faced the same problem when it was called to war. It found that its military establishment was not organized to carry on successfully the military and at the same time the business work of the war. Early it separated these great branches of war work, leaving to the military establishment the work of caring for purely military matters, and transferring to a new department the purely business portions of preparation and support. It created a new place in the cabinet and established the ministry of munitions. Under Mr. Lloyd-George, who was appointed head of the new department, the productive and industrial forces of the nation were organized for war, and almost from the day when this was done efficiency and accomplishment were secured. What has been accomplished in Great Britain under their present system has been not only satisfactory, it has excited the wonder and admiration of the world.

What Great Britain has done we should do. Her difficulty then is our difficulty now. The remedy she applied we should use. Fortunately such action would be in exact accordance with our constitutional system. We have established new departments in the past whenever needed. That time has come now. Such action will effect no disruption of our system. It need occasion no delay. It will allow our War and Navy Departments to give their entire energies to securing men and ships, to train the men and man the ships, to transport troops and arms and ammunition and supplies across the seas, to plan campaigns, and to develop the military policies and operations which shall most speedily bring us victory and a lasting peace. Most of the activities of both the Army and Navy Departments are now devoted to hunting for sources of supply, to making contracts, to arranging for transportation and deliveries, to discussing prices, and other purely business transactions. Under the new system it would only be necessary for the War and Navy Departments to make their requisitions, and the business of securing the arms and ammunition according to the plans and specifications and at the time and place specified would be given the department of munitions, a purely business organization composed of business men.

DEPARTMENT OF WAR SUPPLIES.

There should be established a department of war supplies, with a secretary, who shall be a member of the President's Cabinet. This department should be established at once, and should go out of existence at the close of the war. To this department should be committed the procurement for the Army and Navy on requisitions therefor all classes of war supplies other than those included under the term munitions, including food, feed, fuel, medical and surgical stores, uniforms, tentage, barrack utensils, autos and trucks, horses and mules, and all other supplies of that class.

Under the authority of the Council of National Defense numerous independent boards have been created, to which have been committed many of the war activities. These boards have no power to contract or to bind either the producers or the Government. They are advisory only, and their action is subject to the approval or disapproval of the department. These independent boards, composed in large part of persons serving without salary, have rendered in most instances patriotic and valuable service. They have been, however, a serious impediment to efficiency and expedition. Their service has been at times clouded with the charge of self-interest. They are manifestly a temporary expedient, and the time has come when they should be eliminated. The men who have served on them, who have demonstrated their ability and fitness, should be made the heads of bureaus in appropriate departments and be given authority commensurate with the importance of their work.

Thus within the jurisdiction of the department of transportation should be placed the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Shipping Board, the committee on shipping, the Emergency Fleet Corporation, the Board to Determine Priority in Transportation, and the coordinating committee on exportation.

To the department of munitions should be given jurisdiction now exercised by the War Industries Board, the Munitions Standards Board, the Aircraft Board, and the Advisory Committee for Aeronautics.

To the department of war supplies should be committed the Food Administration, the Fuel Administration, the War Trade Board, the committee on supplies, the committee on raw materials, and all the so-called purchasing committees of the Council of National Defense.

In this way, and in this way only, as I believe, can coordination of the war activities of the Government be obtained. To secure efficiency, expedition, and economy of expenditures there must be authority and responsibility. The prevention of duplication of work is important. The bidding against each other of the departments and bureaus should not be allowed to continue. The necessity of the immediate abandonment by the departments of red tape, circumlocution, and unnecessary routine is apparent to all. The kaleidoscopic changes that are almost daily bulletined from the War Department are none of them calculated to cure these evils. Efforts made by the department to eliminate, as far as possible, red-tape methods will undoubtedly help. But the great necessity, and the one the department seems unwilling even to consider, is that the department be relieved of the purchasing business. This for some unaccountable reason it is unwilling to relinquish. It would seem as if the officers who compose the personnel of the department would be glad to be relieved of the embarrassing duties for which they are so illy fitted and in the performance of which no credit can attach to them. It would appear that being educated for the purpose they would desire to devote their attention to purely military problems and be relieved from business routine and office drudgery. It might be expected that their desire would be for active service in the field where their qualifications fit them to serve with distinction and where now they are so much needed. When the demand for officers educated to train recruits for service and to command troops in the field is so great and the supply is so small it is difficult to justify holding West Point graduates to positions as office clerks, in the performance of purely business transactions.

With the organization of the new departments for war service the war cabinet so earnestly desired may be secured. With the President at its head, it would consist of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the secretary of transportation, the secretary of munitions, and the secretary of war supplies. With the absorption by the new departments of the present independent boards practically all the war activities would be represented in such a war cabinet. Meeting daily, as do the European war cabinets, all the work essential to progress could be considered and correlated. Unity of action, speed in accomplishment, and effectiveness in execution would thus be made possible. The Constitution is not violated under this method of reorganization. The President is not deprived of his power. The War and Navy Departments would be strengthened for real war work, and the heads of these departments could give to the greater problems of the war the consideration necessary and which is impossible while they are burdened with duties others can better perform. Big men, in whom the Nation would have confidence, could thus be given the great work of carrying on the war and could be placed in closer relationship for conference and advice with the President. The reorganization necessary would be very moderate. As compared with the changes in administration methods and personnel that have taken place in other countries engaged in the war, it would be inconsiderable. Entire reorganizations of the cabinets of Great Britain, Germany, France, Austria-Hungary, and Italy have occurred many times during the war. They have made without hesitation the changes found necessary to meet the increased demands of Government work occasioned by the war. We should not wait until failure to meet the extraordinary demands by existing machinery shall lead us to more drastic and dangerous measures.

I have endeavored to show that an attempt to deprive the President of his constitutional powers as the head of the executive departments of the Nation and as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy is unconstitutional and unwise.

I have tried to point out that the creation of a war cabinet as an independent body is practically impossible, and that by the creation of the three new war departments of transportation, munitions, and war supplies, and the appointment of "three distinguished citizens of demonstrated executive ability" as the heads of these departments, together with the Secretaries of War and the Navy, would give the President a war cabinet, as a natural consequence and on a constitutional basis.

I have sought to show that this proposition is not revolutionary, will not be a mere experiment, and need cause no embarrassment to the President or to the departments affected by the proposed changes. Above all, that it will cause no delay and will assist and facilitate the great work of carrying on the war.

It is only necessary further to say that whatever the machinery provided, that whoever may be called to the Nation's service, even if the action taken be considered unwise, and even if we believe the persons in service inefficient, our duty is done when we use our best endeavor to correct what we believe to be the defect. If suggestions are not followed, if the remedies advocated are not adopted, we are not thereby relieved from doing all that we can to support the prosecution of the war with the men and the measures which are provided. It would be unfortunate if honest endeavors to correct defects were unavailing. But it would be still more unfortunate if because such advice is not taken any one should either remain indifferent or in opposition to the vigorous prosecution of the war. That object should be and remain our supreme desire and duty whatever the means provided and whoever shall remain in or be called to the service of the Government.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out, in line 8, page 77, the words "personal services and."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BORLAND: Page 77, line 8, after the word "including" strike out the words "personal services and."

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, this bill contains a great many provisions for increases of the clerical forces. I do not intend to offer to this appropriation bill any amendment in regard to the hours of service in the departments, because it is a deficiency bill and, of course, temporary in its character. But the fact that it does provide for so many increases in the clerical force simply accentuates the unfortunate situation in which we have gotten in employing a large number of people for a short day's work and attempting to provide office space and housing for that excessive number.

Now, in this particular paragraph these personal services are probably more imperative than any other paragraph in this bill. I simply want to call attention to the fact that the way, in my judgment, to remedy the evil of an excessive number of employees in Washington is, if a resolution comes before the House to provide for a general increase and classification of salaries for the employees, to provide in that resolution for the increase of the working hours from seven hours to the standard eight-hour day.

If that is not done it will be necessary to append the amendment to each appropriation bill as it comes through the House. In order that there may not be any sidestepping of the eight-hour proposition I intend to offer it to every appropriation bill as it goes through the House. I hope the amendment will remain in the Agricultural appropriation bill as it has gone through the House and receive the approval of the Senate.

It seems that this simple business proposition has produced a great deal of bitterness in the District of Columbia. One Herostatos undertook to acquire fame by burning down the temple of Diana at Ephesus, but he failed to acquire fame. That man was a piker. He ought to come to Washington and attempt to change the hours of Government clerks to eight hours a day, and, he would acquire fame enough to last him for the rest of his life. [Laughter.] Strange to say, that simple business proposition, which receives the assent of every assemblage of American citizens outside of the District of Columbia, has produced intense bitterness in the District, and I regret that exceedingly.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. MORGAN. I have some protests by some organizations against the gentleman's proposition. I understood the gentleman to say that it met with universal approval.

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; there is a propaganda operating from Washington to get organizations throughout the country to send protests to Senators and Representatives. I have received some of those protests, and I have answered them in this way: I have telegraphed each one "You are jeopardizing your own just claims for consideration in Congress by interfering in a matter of the greatest discrimination and injustice in the District of Columbia." That is the only answer to be given them, and when they look into the matter they will conclude, as the organizations in my district have, not to help perpetuate the abuse of a short day in the District of Columbia.

As I say, the proposal has stirred up a great deal of bitterness in the District, and I regret it; but that does not change my opinion of the legislative power or the legislative duty of Congress to correct the abuse. It does seem to me that it is an imperative thing during the extreme shortage of labor all over the country, when we are bringing thousands of young people here as we are in this bill, to attempt to perform Government service in the District of Columbia, and thereby increase the shortage of labor of the business men and the farmers throughout the country, making it more difficult for them to speed up, making it more difficult for them to produce supplies for the Army, making it more difficult for people to pay taxes which are exacted of them; when we are doing that we must look well to these appropriations for personal services in the District of Columbia. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my amendment, and I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORGAN, by unanimous consent, was given leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I ask to proceed for a few minutes out of order. Yesterday in my mail came a remarkable letter, which I think is worthy of mention in the Halls of Congress of the United States and also of being called to the attention of the country. I live in the city of Charlotte, Mich. It is a city of 5,800 inhabitants. Of course we are all proud of our home towns, our district, our State, and our country. I have lived there for 50 years, all of my active life, and while there has been a great change there have been no conditions like the present times from many standpoints. That city readily purchased its share of liberty bonds. It subscribed nearly double the amount of its allotment. It has subscribed liberally to the Red Cross, the Young Men's Christian Association, and all over the city are active workers in the prosecution of the war.

Recently they were asked to subscribe to the war savings and thrift stamps. They have two splendid organizations in the city—the commercial club and the community association—both composed of active, determined business men, well united. When the call went out by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States to sell $2,000,000,000 worth of these stamps a survey was made of the town; it was divided into small districts and two persons appointed in each district to look after the sale of these stamps. And I am pleased to say here upon the floor of this House, in the Congress of the United States, the greatest in the world, that every man, woman, and child in that city purchased a war stamp or a thrift stamp. [Applause.] We are all proud of that up in our city. That was splendid; but may I particularly mention the fact that Charlotte, Mich., was the first city in the United States where every citizen—man, woman, and child—purchased a liberty stamp under this call. [Applause.] It proves not only that the patriotism of that city is 100 per cent but it also proves that the people residing in that splendid little city are alive to the work in hand; that they are doing their share to win the war; that they not only subscribe their funds but gave of their time and ability to this work. After their plans were perfected within three days every man, woman, and child had their names down on the list and opposite the name was the number and amount of the stamps purchased by that individual.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This is a remarkable circumstance which the gentleman is relating. Where did this occur?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. At Charlotte, Mich. That city is also remarkable in its citizenry. It has only two colored families. They are highly respected and good citizens. There is only one Chinaman. He said at first that he would not buy a stamp for 25 cents. When asked why he said, "Me pay $5." And he paid the five.

Mr. TREADWAY. May I ask if that Chinaman is naturalized?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; but he is naturalized enough to put up his money, which is not done by some in other cities who are naturalized and who ought to do it. [Applause.] Then there is one Italian. The rest are splendid American citizens, working together harmoniously and industriously to do their part to win the war.

The work is going on. The determination and resolution shown in that city is illustrative of the district I represent. I say for my district, and I say for the State of Michigan, that not only did we meet our share of the liberty loan of $2,000,000,000, but we also oversubscribed the liberty loan of $5,000,000,000, and we will pass on to the next liberty loan, and the next, as long as the necessity of the war requires it. We are ready to do the work in hand, whatever is necessary in defending our country, our homes, and our honor. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Gauge standardization: To provide by cooperation of the Bureau of Standards, the War Department, the Navy Department, and the Council of National Defense, for the standardization and testing of the standard gauges, screw threads, and standards required in manufacturing throughout the United States, and to calibrate and test such standard gauges, screw threads, and standards, including necessary equipment, rental in Washington, and elsewhere, erection of temporary structures, offices expenses, books of reference and periodicals, personal services in the District of Columbia, and in the field, and all other necessary items not included in the foregoing, $75,000.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In line 22 I see the words—and standards required in manufacturing throughout the United States.

Does that refer directly to the standards employed by the War and Navy Departments, or in general manufacturing? It seems a very broad term. I am aware that at the beginning of the war we were very short of standard gauges for all kinds of necessary war equipment, but it does not seem to me that that phraseology would directly apply to this deficiency. Therefore I would like to inquire whether it is expected that it would apply directly to War and Navy needs, and also whether it is looking toward the establishment of a sort of bureau and storehouse for these gauges for future use?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; it is looking to the standardization of the gauges used in connection with war needs. They have a master gauge that is made the basis of measurement for the others. It is not with the idea of having any great supply of jigs, gauges, and dies out there.

Mr. TREADWAY. But it is intended to have a master gauge that could be kept indefinitely.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Is there not a typographical error in line 2, page 78? Should not that word "officers" be "office"?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes. I move to amend, in line 2, page 78, by striking out the word "officers" and inserting the word "office."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 78, line 2, strike out the word "officers" and insert in lieu thereof the word "office."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Public utility companies: To enable the Bureau of Standards to make investigations urgently needed by public utility companies in order to improve their efficiency and adjust their methods of operation to meet the changed economic conditions incident to the war, and to aid State and municipal administrative officers and the management of publicly owned utilities in adjusting standards of service when necessary to meet present conditions, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $50,000, to continue available during the fiscal year 1919.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Is not a good deal of the work designated here to come under the Bureau of Standards being handled at the present time under investigations of the Department of Labor?

Mr. SHERLEY. Nothing of this sort at all. This is to make certain investigations touching the manufacture of gas, so as to save some by-products for the use of the Government in making explosives. Gas in many localities is now manufactured of a different quality from what was used in time of peace, and that is done in order to save a larger amount of by-products that there is a scarcity of needed in the manufacture of explosives. This is to further study and help in that work.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask a question. In line 7, on page 78, there is a provision for testing and investigating the use of scales and mine cars used for weighing and measuring coal dug by miners. In western Pennsylvania that is done by the Bureau of Mines located in Pittsburgh, where they have a large building containing a laboratory and a number of experts who do that work. Is it proposed to remove that work from Pittsburgh, where it is near the mines and where every person can have access without travel expenses, down here to Washington to the Bureau of Standards?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; it is not proposed to do any such thing. It is to send out and test mine scales which they have found in many instances to be defective.

Mr. ROBBINS. The provision is all right, and it ought to be carried, but the thought that strikes me there is that it would be duplicating the work that the Bureau of Mines in Pittsburgh is doing for the bituminous-coal region in western Pennsylvania.

Mr. SHERLEY. No. It is proposed to test the scales where they are.

Mr. ROBBINS. That is exactly what they do from the Bureau of Mines at Pittsburgh. They send out a man wherever there is a complaint made and they test the scales.

Mr. SHERLEY. The statement was made before the committee that they have discovered a great deal of false weighing, and that the purpose of this money was to enable the bureau to cooperate with the States in establishing standard weights by which the State governments could test the various scales used in their respective States, and it serves to decentralize and take from the Federal Government and put where it belongs on the State government the doing of this highly important work.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR.

To enable the Secretary of Labor to advance to wage earners transportation to such places as may be deemed necessary for the purpose of securing employment in connection with the prosecution of the war, $250,000, which may be used as a revolving fund until June 30, 1918: Provided, That advances hereunder shall be so made as to insure the return to the Treasury of sums so advanced: Provided further, That an accounting shall be kept of the operations under this paragraph which shall include as to each person transported the following: Name, vocation, starting point and destination, shipyard, factory, or other place for which transported, and amount of advance made.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph just read. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether it is proposed under this authorization to advance money to laborers in general regardless of whether they are to be employed by the Government or whether it is to be limited to a class or extended to all laborers who may in any way be employed in advancing the Government's interests?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is my understanding it is not limited in the sense that they are to be employed directly by the Government, but it is expected to be used only in those cases where the employment is necessary in connection with work done for the Government in the prosecution of the war, and that it is a war measure, seeking to deal with an acute situation that now confronts the country. The gentleman will recall that the other day, in speaking in general debate, I called attention to the fact of how there had been congested in certain States three-fourths of all war contracts and in one State—the State of New York—one-fourth of them. Now, that of necessity has resulted in a tremendous need of laborers in certain localities way beyond the power of those localities to furnish, and the testimony clearly showed the needs of some governmental action being taken looking to help the men who were unemployed to go to places where employment waited them and where their labor was much needed in order to carry on activities in connection with the war.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has any plan been evolved by the Department of Labor as to the method of securing the return of the funds advanced as provided by this paragraph?

Mr. SHERLEY. The detail of it has not been worked out. The bureau dealing with this particular matter has recently been organized and enlarged, and the suggestions contained herein were the suggestions which originated with the subcommittee dealing with the bill and were put there with the idea of safeguarding as far as possible the expenditure of this money.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to proceed out of order for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I desire to call the attention of Members who are interested in the subject of farm labor to an anonymous letter I received from a senior student at the Alabama Polytechnic Institute a few days ago, which to my mind presents a rather practical suggestion along this line. I realize that it has no place under the provisions of the pending legislation, and probably can not under any circumstance come within the purview of congressional action, yet it is a matter that I think ought properly be called to the attention of the House. In my time I read the letter:

AUBURN, ALA., February 2, 1918.

Hon. WM. B. BANKHEAD,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Complying to your letter of request, beg to say that at this critical moment and needy time for more food, warrants the best efforts of all Americans who can produce anything for the table or for feeding live stock, which means a table necessity in the end.

There are many young men who are still in the colleges and universities of the United States that have not yet been rushed to the "colors." In view of the fact that the seniors will have gotten all the fundamentals by April 1, I believe there should be a provision made allowing these institutions to graduate the senior classes April 1, provided these men will sign pledges to go home and engage in farming, or they may be employed by the Government to engage in some emergency food-producing activity. I feel that this pledge should be signed for at least 10 weeks from April 1. Owing to the great conflict that is pending between the great nations of the world, I believe the food production within the United States this season determines the destiny of this and the allied countries.

We are interested in the success of our country, first of all, to such extent as to be willing to make any sacrifice necessary to win in the great struggle that is now pending, because we believe that we are right. Yes; we are willing to help feed our soldiers who are in the trenches or elsewhere, even though we do it at a sacrifice at any cost.

I am a member of senior class, Alabama Polytechnic Institute, Auburn, Ala., finishing in four departments June 12. My home is in your district—

Here is one of the things which impressed me about this letter—

I am 36 years of age, but my heart and my interest is for this country. Yes; I can plow a mule or two mules this season if it will tide this country over a tottering bridge.

May we note any provision leading to this end?

Respectfully,

A MEMBER OF SENIOR CLASS,
ALABAMA POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTE,
Auburn, Ala.

Now, gentlemen, I do not know how it is in other States, but in the State of Alabama we not only have a very fine agricultural and mechanical college, with an attendance of some 1,000 or 1,500 students, but also in each congressional district there is a district agricultural school with a large number of students. And one of the suggestions made here, in view of the fact that the students who attend these agricultural schools in Alabama are, as a matter of fact, boys who have been reared upon farms and who have practical actual knowledge of farm labor and farm conditions, if some means could be devised, even by suggestion, to the presidents of these institutions in the different States by the Members of Congress, although it would not aggregate a very enormous number of farm laborers, yet it would amount, indeed, to several thousand of the most efficient and best young men of the country who might sign a pledge to work from April 1 for 10 weeks or longer, providing they were allowed to be graduated at their colleges, to go home and render most efficient and splendid service by filling up in some measure at least the shortage in farm labor. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that we may return to page 48, and that lines 21 to 25, page 48, lines 1 to 25, page 49, lines 1 to 8, on page 50, all inclusive, may be restored to the bill for the consideration of the committee. On Saturday the point of order was made to these provisions.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to return to pages 48, 49, and 50, to restore the language contained in lines 21 to 25, on page 48, line 1 to 25, on page 49, and lines 1 to 8, on page 50. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I want to state that I made the point of order on Saturday against these two items because they were clearly subject to the point of order, and it was so held by the Chair, but I want to state to the committee that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds on Saturday considered it and to-day considered it again, and we are clearly of that opinion and the House seemed to be of that opinion. We have made the point of order, Mr. Chairman, purely and solely for the purpose of attempting to preserve the jurisdiction which the rules of the House has given us, believing that those rules ought to be maintained and preserved where jurisdiction is clearly defined, but understanding that this matter has already been gone through with by the Committee on Appropriations, and having been appealed to by those interested as to its urgency, knowing, of course, that a reference of the items now to our committee may delay the matter, although we could, of course, dispose of it in a very few days, but there would have to be another appropriation bill brought in to carry it out, and in order not to stand in the way we have decided that we will not press the objection.

I want to say this, however, Mr. Chairman, that this is not to be considered as any precedent whatever. We are not intending to concede in the slightest degree that we have not full and complete jurisdiction over the subject matter, and I want to give notice that hereafter we shall certainly insist on points of order against items of this character. I do not think, and our committee does not think, that it is any effort on the part of anybody to reach out and take jurisdiction that does not belong to them. The trouble is that these department officials get up a lot of data when they want certain legislation, and in order to run along the shortest route, as they take it, go to the Appropriations Committee, and file this data, which ought to go to some other committee. And it seems to me the whole House ought to be interested in preserving the jurisdiction of the respective committees and let these department officials and everybody else understand that they must go in the orderly way, to the proper committees in the House, in order to get legislation which they think is advisable and proper.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Did the gentleman's committee go into the merits of this proposition? It seems to me, from what I will have to admit is a cursory examination, that this appropriation is to be used for buildings not good enough for permanent buildings.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will state to the gentleman that our committee has not examined into the question at all. We have never considered it from any point except the question of jurisdiction. All the data and all the facts have been placed before the Committee on Appropriations. Those gentlemen have investigated it, and for any information about it the gentleman will have to apply to them. I know nothing about the merits of the proposition.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Here are $8,000,000 to be spent on temporary buildings, built of reinforced concrete, which, of course, will have to have heavy foundations and all that. They can be built for much less and answer the purpose.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will say to the gentleman that we have already spent over $2,000,000 on buildings of the same character and for the same purpose.

I want to make this remark in passing. Last year when these buildings on Sixth Street were contemplated the representatives of the War and Navy Departments stated to the Public Buildings Commission that they wanted 700,000 square feet of space to take care of the overflow of the two departments; that they had made a careful survey, and that space would answer their purposes. We gave them one million and some fifty-odd thousand square feet, and before that building was completed and occupied the same gentlemen are back to Congress asking for appropriations of over $8,000,000 for two and one-half million square feet additional to the million square feet in the first building. Now, as I say, that probably is needed.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. In just a moment.

I hardly think the Appropriations Committee would have consented to have it go in the bill unless it was needed, but it shows these gentlemen who make calculations as to what space is needed have made a sad mistake in this instance, to say the least of it. They have not made the careful surveys that somebody ought to have made.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Did not the gentleman's committee take up the question with any of the departments interested in order to ascertain the number of employees that are to be provided for as covered by this item?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No, sir.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. You have not had any information?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. We have not investigated it at all, because it has not been before our committee.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I notice there is nothing in the hearings as to the total. I presume the Committee on Appropriations was satisfied informally as to the necessity for the item. There is nothing in the hearings about it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I suppose the chairman of the Appropriations Committee could give the gentleman that information. We have made no investigation at all.

I just want to say in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, that this is in the nature of notice that we are going to consent and not raise any objection to this, because it has progressed as far as it has, and we do not care to obstruct; but hereafter we intend to insist strictly on our rights under the rules of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Florida a question. The gentleman speaks about 1,000,000 square feet having been provided. Were those for temporary quarters?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. They were understood to be such.

Mr. LENROOT. What was the cost of that 1,000,000 square feet?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Something over $2,000,000.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I take it that there is no one in the House, on either side of the center aisle, that wishes to delay unnecessarily for one moment the enactment of legislation that will tend legitimately to the prosecution of this war. I know that I shall not press any point of order, although one would lie against this provision. But in view of the great amount of money that is asked for, $8,152,500 in two lump-sum appropriations—one of $5,775,000 and one of $2,377,500—one sum to be turned over to the Secretary of the Navy, to be spent under his supervision nominally, although, as a matter of fact, it will be impossible for him to give personal supervision to the expenditure; and the other sum to be turned over to the Secretary of War, to be expended under his supervision nominally, although, as a matter of fact, we all know that he is so occupied with the enormous demands of his office that he can not give these expenditures his personal supervision. And after all that by way of parenthesis, I add this: That we ought to insist before we vote this through that there be a demonstration before this Chamber of the necessity of such an enormous expenditure for temporary buildings.

Last summer, as the House will recall, there was quite a spirited debate on the proposal made in the bill which was then in charge of the gentleman from New York, now not a Member of the House, Mr. Fitzgerald, for $2,000,000 with which to put up temporary frame buildings. I thought that $2,000,000 worth of lumber put into temporary buildings would cover all the vacant space, practically, that there is in the city of Washington; but they expended it all, and now they want only the modest sum of $8,000,000 additional for temporary structures, making in the aggregate approximately $10,500,000 for temporary structures.

Now, the conditions prescribed in the lines included within the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], the distinguished chairman of the committee, are very general in their character. They mention only the area of the buildings, with very little more. They define their location with reasonable precision, but practically $8,000,000 is turned over to the discretion of two men, and neither of them can give the expenditure his undivided attention or anything approaching his undivided attention.

Now, relying upon the judgment of my friend from Kentucky, the members of the committee—and, by the way, I do not understand that the full Committee on Appropriations took this testimony. It seems so from the record, which tends to show that the testimony was taken only by a subcommittee of five; and I notice, in looking through the list of the names of the subcommittee, the name of one whom I have hardly seen here at all since January. That leaves but four, and all of these facts together make it necessary, I think, that as cautious legislators we should require full and detailed statements, which will demonstrate the necessity for an appropriation like this for temporary buildings.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question before he takes his seat?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Certainly.

Mr. ROBBINS. I understand these temporary buildings that were authorized down on the old Pennsylvania Depot square, or depot site, were increased beyond a million feet beyond what Congress authorized. Is that true or not?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I do not know.

Mr. ROBBINS. What is the necessity of using this park and cutting down those trees when there is a wide space between here and the Union Station with no trees on it? The parks should be used in connection with the beautifying of the city of Washington.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order, and I think before that matter is settled the committee is entitled to know what information the members of the committee can give to the House as to the necessity of this appropriation.

Mr. SHERLEY. There is no desire on the part of anybody to take snap judgment of the House. I assumed that instead of now undertaking to debate the matter on request the debate would come up naturally in the discussion of the restored paragraphs.

Mr. LENROOT. If the point is not reserved, and the committee is not able to give the fullest information desired, it would not be the fault of the committee.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman misunderstood my request. I did not request that the matter be considered in the bill in the sense of having been approved by the Committee of the Whole. I suggested that it be restored to the bill for the consideration of the Committee of the Whole. I do not want to mislead the gentleman. If my request should be acquiesced in, it would result in putting the matter into the bill for the consideration of the committee.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Beyond the point of order?

Mr. SHERLEY. With the idea that the point of order would not be made. There is no use in doing a foolish thing. The point of order has been made. The idea was to put the provisions in for consideration. It would be in order to strike out or amend, or anything else.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to have some information as to what the million square feet cost, and why this should cost so much more.

Mr. SHERLEY. I made a very full statement to the House in my opening statement, and I am more than willing to do it again. As a matter of convenience, I will take the floor now.

Mr. LENROOT. Very well. If the gentleman can give the information, I will withdraw my point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have enough responsibilities. If I can not demonstrate to this House the merits of the proposition, it ought to go out.

Mr. LENROOT. I have no objection.

Mr. Sisson. Mr. Chairman, I feel that this statement should be made in view of the understanding I have had, representing the Committee on Appropriations, with the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Clark], the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. It might not be amiss to make a short statement as to how this matter got into the appropriation bill at all.

As was suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin a moment ago, there was quite a little controversy over the building at Sixth Street, on a part of the Mall, which, I believe, is about completed—on the square where the old Pennsylvania depot used to be. At that time the subcommittee was requested to take this matter up on account of the very urgency of the need of space for clerks. The matter was taken up at that time by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations with the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, with the idea that if they had no objection to its being considered in our committee, that committee could have a hearing and report a bill which would then be in order on the appropriation bill, and not delay the matter. The chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, each representing his respective committee, agreed that it would be better to put it, as an urgent matter, in the urgent deficiency bill. Buildings of that character had been carried prior to that as urgent deficiencies.

Now this subcommittee on deficiencies has been called upon to begin the erection of some permanent buildings not authorized by law. Your subcommittee and the full committee declined to consider the matter at all, on the ground that our jurisdiction would only be limited to this item, on account of its great urgency. Technically we have no jurisdiction of the matter, even under that state of the record, but in view of the pressing need and the necessity of making provision for the thousands of clerks that are being assembled and brought to Washington with no place for them at present in which to work in the various offices, this necessity was represented to the committee, and there was no understanding at that time between the respective committees as to these items. It was my understanding—not the understanding of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, nor did any member of the committee understand it that way—but it was my understanding that as to these temporary buildings they might be considered as urgent deficiency items and cared for by items in the bill.

Now, in addition to all of that matter, there was a commission that had to be consulted. Your subcommittee not only consulted among themselves and with the full committee, but we consulted with the members of the Senate who had handled this matter, consulted with the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, and consulted with the gentleman who has charge of public buildings in the War, State, and Navy Building, and had them all there. All the propositions were presented to the committee; and one or more trips were made by your subcommittee, and one trip with the representatives of the Senate, with those two respective architects representing the two departments of the Government, and after quite a good deal of delay we thrashed out all of the differences. That accounts for this item being in the bill. If it should be considered and passed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, it would then have to come to the Committee on Appropriations for the appropriation.

So this in no sense of the word can be considered as any precedent for the Appropriations Committee taking jurisdiction of public buildings.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. What I have been particularly interested in is the showing that was made to the committee as to the necessity for housing this large number of additional employees.

Mr. Sisson. I was not intending to go into that feature at this time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is the important feature.

Mr. Sisson. I was simply carrying out an agreement which I had with the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds that this statement should be made by me, so that it might not be considered as being any precedent or any waiver of jurisdiction on the part of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds for this committee to consider items of this kind. Your subcommittee and your full committee realized thoroughly that we have no jurisdiction of these matters, and I have no doubt that from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations clear on down through the entire committee we would have been delighted to wash our hands of this entire matter and let the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee handle it and fix it so that the appropriation might be made.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. Sisson. Certainly.

Mr. TREADWAY. I understood the gentleman from Mississippi to state that he consulted with two architects, representing the War and Navy Departments.

Mr. Sisson. No; with Mr. Woods, Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, who has certain buildings and grounds under his jurisdiction, and who is, by the way, a member of this building commission, as well as Col. Ridley, of the State, War, and Navy Building, who is the superintendent of those buildings and grounds.

Mr. TREADWAY. Then I misunderstood the gentleman about the two architects?

Mr. Sisson. Those are the two men. Mr. Woods is an architect, and Col. Ridley also. I did not mean any outside architects.

Mr. TREADWAY. I was endeavoring to find out a little more in detail along the line of the inquiry I made a few days ago—has the committee seen any plans and specifications, so as to know on what method the contracts were to be let?

Mr. Sisson. All our consultation was with officials of the Government.

Mr. WHEELER. I wish to know whether the department recommends reinforced concrete; and if so, why is it necessary to have that material for a temporary building?

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, I think we can get at this whole matter very much more orderly when we get to the consideration of the merits of it.

But, answering now the gentleman's inquiry, the reinforced-concrete proposal came before the committee as the result of two suggestions—one made by the War Department for a concrete building down near Henry Park and one from the Navy Department, who desired a concrete building for themselves. But the determination rested finally with the committee, and was based on the fact that the difference in cost between concrete and frame was not sufficient in our judgment to make worth while the taking of the risk to life and property involved in further housing people in wooden structures.

Mr. WHEELER. Will these buildings be fireproof?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; the concrete will not only be fireproof, but will be as permanent as time, if you want to leave these buildings. They are spoken of as temporary, not with the idea that they will soon wear out, but simply with the idea that these are not the places that would be selected for permanent buildings in the sense that that term is used ordinarily.

Mr. WHEELER. Will the floors and sills be of concrete?

Mr. SHERLEY. All concrete.

Mr. WHEELER. No wooden framework whatever?

Mr. SHERLEY. Flooring and framework and walls and roof of concrete. I will try to give the House the details in a few moments.

Mr. Sisson. In order to conclude my statement and not detain the committee, so that we may get down to the merits of this proposition, so far as I am personally concerned I agree heartily with the statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds [Mr. Clark of Florida] that the jurisdiction of these two committees should be kept absolutely separate, as the rules indicate; and it is only under the pressing necessities of the present that the rule ought ever to be violated. So far as I am personally concerned, I can only speak for myself, but as a member of the subcommittee I will say that these matters shall not be considered, if I can help it, except after consultation with the chairman of the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee or any other committee that may have proper jurisdiction over a matter that might be included in a deficiency bill.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. Sisson. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What induced the committee to insert the provision regarding these structures being built of reinforced concrete, when the $2,000,000 buildings down here are of wood?

Mr. Sisson. It is quite a long story, but I can tell the gentleman in a word. A great many of the clerks and employees in the Navy Department will have to deal with the drawings for the building program of the Navy, and if you did not have buildings reasonably safe from fire it would be absolutely disastrous if those plans and specifications were destroyed. The hearings were complete and the testimony was overwhelming that unless we were in a position to build them fireproof vaults, or a place where they could keep these documents and drawings, it would mean disaster if there was a fire.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Inasmuch as the Government for about 12 years has owned the land from Pennsylvania Avenue to the Mall, down near Fifteenth Street, containing now, as then, many buildings that are nothing but eyesores to that part of the city, why did you not propose to put these new structures there?

Mr. SISSON. The question of time entered into that. We would have to destroy the buildings that are there now, all of which are going to be used for office space anyway. A good many of these buildings are already being occupied. Some buildings are being constructed. As I understand, these buildings will probably be occupied by the Internal-Revenue offices.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It looks like a rather serious proposition to put $8,000,000 of buildings into a magnificent park.

Mr. SISSON. It is a most serious business and there is no question about it, but the subcommittee and the full committee in considering this matter found there was no other alternative.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does the gentleman say that the full committee considered the bill?

Mr. SISSON. The full committee only considered the statement made by the chairman of the committee, but his statement was very full. They had all the maps before the committee, but had no witnesses there.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In other words, the full committee heard the statement of a witness who had heard the witnesses.

Mr. SISSON. The full committee heard the statement of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And he had heard the witnesses.

Mr. SISSON. The hearing was what the full committees have at times when the subcommittee has investigated the testimony of witnesses; the subcommittee reports to the full committee, and until the full committee was satisfied they would continue the investigation.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I was only prompted to ask the question because the gentleman said that the full committee had approved of the findings of the subcommittee, and as far as that is concerned I understand from the gentleman's own statement that the full committee knew nothing about the testimony at all except as the chairman came in and gave a synopsis of it.

Mr. SISSON. I did not intend to make any other statement than that it was reported by the subcommittee and was considered by the full committee, and there was no objection to it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, this matter has been stricken from the bill on a point of order. I wish to reserve the right to object. I understand an agreement has been made between the committee reporting this bill and the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, who made the point of order, and that there is some objection apparent, or some desire on the part of certain gentlemen to learn more about this item before the matter is reinserted in the bill. It seems to me that the statement as to the necessity, and as to the information which the committee procured on this matter, ought to be made before the item is put back into the bill. If it is, then there need not be any discussion of the item at that time, and further time in discussion will be saved. I ask that the chairman of the committee make his statement as to the necessity of this item at this time, and unless that is done I think objection should be made to putting the item back in the bill, and I am willing to make the objection.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. The matter has been very fully investigated and the gentleman from Kentucky did make a full explanation in his opening speech, although I think there were not over 40 or 50 Members present. Now, if the point of order is withdrawn and the matter considered on its merits, unless the merits are so strong as to convince the committee, I am satisfied it will be rejected by the committee. But suppose under the gentleman's plan we spent three or four hours in the consideration of this and everyone favored it but one Member and he objected? We would lose all that time. It seems to me that we can trust the Committee of the Whole in the premises. Later on we would have to do it when the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds should report. I believe that the inquiry in the committee disclosed that time is of the essence and that prompt action is required.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I will say in reply to the gentleman from Illinois that I think this method of mine would save time. The chairman of the committee could outline the matter briefly from facts ascertained the need for this legislation and then that being demonstrated there could be no objection to restoring the item to the bill. We would then be in a position to proceed with the discussion of the matter and close up the discussion of the entire bill within a few minutes.

Mr. CANNON. With this difference, that the majority after discussion would agree or disagree to it, and under the gentleman's plan one man after the discussion could defeat action.

Mr. WALSH. As he can now?

Mr. CANNON. Precisely. Here is a condition that has got to be met if we do our duty, and why can not gentlemen trust the committee now to consider and let the majority act.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. FESS. In case this item goes out on a point of order, can not the Rules Committee make it in order?

Mr. CANNON. In the event the majority should ratify the rule, but that would lead to further delay.

Mr. FESS. It is likely to go in anyway, is it not?

Mr. CANNON. I do not know how that may be; I can not tell. When a majority of the Rules Committee would report a rule, and a majority after discussion should adopt a rule, then it would be in order. This situation has got to be met either by a report from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds or upon this report made by the Committee on Appropriations. It seems to me that we now have as much leisure to determine the merits of this matter as we will have at any time.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, reserving further the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky if he prefers to repeat his statement regarding the matter now or after it has been restored to the bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. I will say frankly to the gentleman that it seems to me the orderly thing is to do as we would if the point of order had not been raised and the matter was up like any other provision in the bill. I will say frankly to the House that if we can not show the need of these buildings they ought not to be built.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I do not object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The paragraph has been read and is now restored to the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Have we passed the Department of Labor paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; on page 81.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I desire to discuss that paragraph a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is rather late. We passed page 81, and the gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to return to his item.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is the reason I was thrown out. I want to discuss the labor paragraph for a moment.

Mr. SHERLEY. There will be an opportunity for the gentleman to take five minutes in the discussion of it later if he desires.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Very well.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, there were two proposals in connection with the building proposal that ought to be kept distinct, one relating to concrete buildings and one relating to wooden buildings.

I shall endeavor to repeat somewhat what I undertook to say to the House in presenting the bill several days ago as to what actuated the committee. There is not a great deal of testimony in the hearings touching the matter. That was not intentional, but came about in this way. It became apparent in the early consideration of the bill, from the letters that were being sent to me as chairman of the committee, the requests that were being made by various departments, and the statements being made by the heads of departments, that there was need of a great deal of space in Washington. It was also exceedingly difficult to get from anyone a statement that matched up with anybody else's statement, because the situation was shifting from day to day. So the committee did what it thought was better than undertaking to take some representatives of the various departments, cross-examine them touching their needs unconnected with other departments, and thus come to a conclusion. It had prepared, through the courtesy of Mr. Brown, the head of the Bureau of Efficiency, a list of questions which it sent out to every department in the Government, asking it to state the amount of space they now had other than that which was Government owned, the rent they were paying for it, the amount of space they would need prior to the 1st of July, and the amount of space they would need subsequent to the 1st of July. Those reports came in in great detail and constitute a stack of papers a foot high. They have been summarized in the statement which I read from the other day, and from which I shall again read to the committee. These reports gave much more of detailed information than we could have obtained in days of cross-examination. The summarized statement showed that there was now being occupied by various departments of the Government—that is, there was as of the 1st of January—we had to fix a date which these returns should be for, so that we could get some uniformity—3,826,511 square feet of space in this city for which the departments were paying a rental which at an annual rate would amount to $1,764,019.40.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is that exclusive of the department buildings?

Mr. SHERLEY. That is exclusive of the Government-owned buildings altogether. The statement shows further that these various departments would need prior to the 1st of July, 1918, 2,109,761 square feet of space, and that of the space now used there was to be vacated only 174,409 square feet. So that practically there were 2,000,000 feet of space they said they needed prior to the 1st of July. Then a statement was given as to the amount of space that would be needed after the 1st of July, additional to what has been mentioned, and that totaled 2,316,270 square feet of space. So that if you take the figures at their face it would show an expected need prior to July of next year of four million four hundred thousand and odd square feet in addition to what we are renting, and we are renting now 3,800,000 square feet of space. The moment you get figures that large you do not have to go into details as to how much each department wanted to know perfectly well that all and more than what is being proposed here would be needed by the departments, and particularly you did not have to have testimony to ascertain this fact, because man after man had testified to it, and it was common knowledge that all of the available space in the District of Columbia is now being used. Men are hunting opportunity to find space that is rentable, without regard to the very high prices that have to be paid.

It was perfectly apparent also to anyone who knew the expansion that was taking place in the Government, as shown by estimates that were being made for additional clerical hire, to say nothing else, that these departments were going to expand tremendously. For instance, the War Department used to have on its regular rolls 1,600 employees. It has now upon its temporary rolls 9,000 employees, and the Ordnance alone have now 4,718 employees and estimate that there will be needed in the fiscal year 1919, 4,000 additional employees. It had submitted a formal estimate for an immediate need of about 1,300,000 square feet of space, and it claimed an additional need for next year of over 2,000,000 square feet. The result was that the committee knew, as the slightest consideration will demonstrate, that all of this space would be needed, and more too, and particularly it knew that if we were not to be held up and continue after the war to have to pay the extravagant rentals we are now paying for these 3,800,000 square feet which we are now occupying as rented space we would have to greatly enlarge the building program.

The proposition, then, came down to two questions—the character of buildings that should be put up and where they should be put up. A good deal of criticism had been leveled at Congress because of the erection of temporary buildings of wood. Particularly was there expressed a fear upon the part of the various departments of housing their valuable records in wooden buildings. So much was that so that the Ordnance people had submitted a separate estimate for a concrete building, that was pending before the committee, and the Navy Department testified that it did not desire to be housed in temporary wooden structures. The War Risk Insurance Bureau had urgently pressed upon the committee the need of a fireproof building for the preservation of its records. The committee therefore made some inquiry as to cost, and it developed in connection with the testimony of Commander Parsons, of the Navy Department, that the Navy had constructed buildings for $2.50 a square foot, made of concrete, which were entirely fireproof, and that they were just finishing a storage building over in New York that would average at that figure.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to continue for 10 minutes longer.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to continue for 15 minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Make it until he concludes his remarks.

Mr. STAFFORD. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kentucky may proceed until he concludes his presentation of the matter. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. They were very urgent, and requested they be given permission to construct on the ellipse a building which would contain something over 900,000 square feet of space, and which they said would enable them to put all of their now scattered departments into one building and greatly increase the efficiency of the departments.

The State Department was urging its need for 100,000 square feet of space, and particularly the desirability of obtaining additional space in the Army and Navy Building. It developed informally that if the Navy Department obtained the building it required the State Department in large measure could be taken care of in the space the Navy would relinquish in the Army and Navy Building.

On cross-examination of Commander Parsons it developed that the type of building that he desired to build on the ellipse, and which he thought he could build for $2.50, would be a three-story, reinforced concrete building, and that the cheapness of construction would depend somewhat upon the lay of the ground, which would enable them to build a building the ground floor of which would be practically a concrete pavement resting on the ground, and would not need the supports that would be necessary in the upper stories, and thereby very greatly lessen the cost; that a three-story building could be built without any elevators, and that it could also be built within a time limit such as to afford the relief now urgently sought. The moment that came before the committee I think all of us were struck with this fact, that we were having to pay $2.25 for frame. If we could build for $3 of concrete—testimony had developed afterwards that if the ground was not ideal the price would range from $2.50, which was put as the minimum, to $3.08, which was put as the extreme outside limit—if we could build for $3 as against $2.25 for frame, that we were hardly justified in risking either the safety of the people who would work in such buildings or the papers and property which would be housed there, and that it was desirable where we could to build of concrete, if we were not so hurried for time as to make it necessary to build wooden buildings. The committee then undertook to determine where we could best build the amount of space that ought to be built.

It was then found we could put at Seventeenth and B Streets, on the ground that is immediately south of the Pan American building and running to the west, two concrete buildings three stories high that would give a floor space of 920,000 square feet in one building and 835,000 square feet in the other; that we could put in Seaton Park, which is just this side of Henry Park, where the temporary buildings which were authorized last year have been constructed, two buildings—one of 270,000 square feet and one of 300,000 square feet. Then, we could put just west of the present buildings another building that would contain 370,000 square feet. We concluded that if we made one of those buildings of concrete it in time would give to the Ordnance people, who are now occupying two-thirds of the Henry Park buildings, enough fire-proof space to take care of their most important papers and probably take care of their entire need in that regard, and by building the other two buildings of wood we could get, with the remaining one-third of the Henry Park buildings, which the Navy was willing to give up immediately and which had been reserved for them, some 900,000 square feet of space in a few months, and thereby take care of the immediate pressing needs of the Army, and that it could wait for the additional space it would need until the completion of the big concrete buildings. The Navy was willing to wait in order to get into one building of concrete. So the plan worked out in that shape. Now, the basic things that this committee ought to consider are these—

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield for one question right there?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The buildings which are to go west of Seventeenth Street are opposite the Pan American Union Building?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And they are concrete. They go south from that street that is next to the Pan American Union building. Do they cut across that line of small trees which runs from Seventeenth up to the Lincoln Memorial?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think they do take in the first row of small young trees which have been planted there, but they do not go far enough south to interfere with the vista of the Lincoln Memorial; and that was one of the things we tried very carefully to safeguard, that the buildings should not be of such bulk as to extend too far to the south or too far west and obscure or hide the Lincoln Memorial, because, manifestly, none of us desire to do that.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It is my understanding—the gentleman will know, I suppose—that they were elms brought from England, and that these double rows of trees, one on the north side and one on the south side, which is to have a roadway between, are English elms, and I hope that these buildings will not go down and destroy those trees.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think those elms can be removed without difficulty and I hope they will be removed. Manifestly we had to move forward and we could not find any space where there were not some trees to be sacrificed.

Mr. ROBBINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. In a moment. May I say in passing I do not believe there is any man in this House who has a greater love for a tree than I have, or any man who regrets more the necessity of going upon the park areas than I do, but the situation was such as to force that to be done. I now yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ROBBINS. In connection with the question of taking trees last year I raised that same question, and I was assured that the trees growing in Henry Park would not be taken, but I observe some of them have been cut down. Why not occupy the space between the Capitol and the Union Station on which no trees are growing, for instance, the Southern Railway Building which is occupied by the War Department and the Union Station occupied by the War Department?

Mr. SHERLEY. There are a number of reasons. In the first place they are totally inadequate. They would not begin to give this amount of space unless you went high in the air, and the moment you get high in the air with a frame building you tremendously increase the risk to life and property from fire. The moment you go high in the air in regard to a concrete building, you tremendously increase both the cost and time of construction. Of course, you have to put elevators in and to build an entirely different type of building.

Now, I want to say this to the committee, as to how we tried to safeguard prices:

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] very properly spoke of the fact that here was some $8,000,000 that was proposed being spent under the War and Navy Departments, and without limitation. Of course, those sums have ceased to be big sums as sums go now. We are voting to be spent by these various departments sums that make these negligible, but aside from that the discretion is not very great that is put in these departments, because we vote moneys to build a certain quantity of floor space, which is predicated upon a fixed price.

Now, the price as to frame buildings is $2.25 a square foot, and as to concrete it is $3 a square foot, and they are required to erect buildings of approximately the amount of area we have indicated for the price we have named. And if the gentleman will simply take the amount named for each of these buildings and divide it by the square feet of floor space, they will find it works out approximately with the wooden buildings $2.25 and the concrete buildings $3.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course, the heating apparatus is not included.

Mr. SHERLEY. That includes heating, but not the power for creating the electric light.

This was not blind figuring. We had actual figures as to frame buildings. The buildings in Henry Park would have cost about $2 a square foot if they had been built exactly for what we appropriated, but the need of putting in a sprinkler system and some other additions made their cost run to $2.16 a square foot.

Since they were started there has been an increase in the price not only of lumber but of labor, which is making buildings that are now being erected up back of the Pan-American and Daughter of American Revolution Buildings cost $2.20 to $2.25 a square foot; and we figured on that. As to the concrete buildings, we had the statements of Commander Parsons, and a statement from Gen. Goethals, though the latter statement was simply a general one contained in a letter saying that he thought they could be built for $3 a square foot; but Parsons's statement was the result of some detail work. It was checked over by Mr. Elliott Woods, the Superintendent of the Capitol, and it was further checked over as to the heating side of it by an officer of the Treasury Department, in the Bureau of Public Buildings and Grounds. So we undertook to check one man against the other to ascertain what the cost of the concrete would be, and we knew by actual experience what the cost of the frame buildings would be.

Now, it seems to me there are three propositions for the committee to consider: First, is it desirable to build wooden buildings as against concrete, having in mind a cost of $2.25 as against $3? And I ought to say in passing that in the salvage of the concrete you would probably obtain nothing; that the cost of removing concrete would eat up the value of the fixtures, and so forth, that might be salvaged. As to frame buildings, you could probably save about 25 cents a square foot. So that the net cost of these buildings when finally removed would be in one instance $2 and in the other $3 a square foot.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to suggest that in the construction of the floors of these concrete buildings there ought to be a wooden floor over the top of the concrete, or some other kind of covering, that will prevent the dust that arises from the disintegration of the concrete by the movement of people in the room; otherwise they will have a lot of people in there who will have their lungs full of the concrete dust, which will be a source of great danger to those who will be working in there. I speak from personal and practical experience as a builder, and I think that that ought to be taken very carefully into account, and either have these floors asphalted or covered with some kind of material that will not admit of disintegration arising in the form of dust and getting into the lungs of people who are working in these rooms.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am glad to have the suggestion of the gentleman, and in reply I have only to say this, namely, that the $3 figure, I think, is sufficient to give leeway to take care of that kind of thing as it should be taken care of, and I presume that Commander Parsons, of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, who impressed the committee as a man who knew his business, will know how to deal with these mechanical and physical conditions.

Mr. MADDEN. Except I think we ought to see that they deal with them.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now the real question is, Shall we try to and put up buildings for $2 a square foot, and subject to the risk of fire loss, as against fireproof buildings at $3 a square foot?

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. By expending $1 more we will insure the lives of the people who have to work there and also preserve these public records?

Mr. SHERLEY. We build an absolutely fireproof building.

Mr. BUTLER. That is worth it.

Mr. SHERLEY. There is another thing that controlled the committee in that regard. When this war is over you are not going to see Washington the city we knew prior to the war. It is never going to contract back into anything like its former size. There is going to be for many years afterwards the need of a great deal of office space, and for all time there is going to be the need of a great deal more office space than in the old days prior to the war.

Now what will happen? If you have only frame buildings, immediately there will come great pressure to have them torn down right away in order that none of the 3,800,000 square feet of space that we are renting at extravagant figures shall be vacated. Every financial influence and every bit of greed that exists in the District of Columbia will be put with all its weight, under one excuse or another, to force the Government to tear down the frame buildings, because they will say, "These things are terrible fire hazards and risks," and while the Government is building the monumental buildings that are permanently to house the departments the rentals will continue to run.

Now, it seemed the part of wisdom for Congress to build buildings of sufficient stability of character and permanency not to be there always but to be there for a sufficient length of time to enable us to adjust ourselves to the situation that will arise after the war is over, and not put us at the mercy of these private owners of property. A use of these buildings for six or eight years, or even a less period, will justify in the saving in rentals the entire expenditure.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. In connection with the use of private buildings, will the construction provided for in this appropriation obviate the necessity of taking over such buildings as the Arlington Hotel Building or the new hotel just across the street from the Treasury, which, it is reported, is to be taken over for office purposes?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will answer the gentleman by saying that the space we are here providing is not, in my judgment, sufficient to take care of all the needs of the Government now, including the Treasury needs. I do not think it will be sufficient for that. I believe we are only providing space sufficient to take care of the Army needs and the Navy needs, with perhaps a little bit of leeway for some of the departments that are intimately associated with those two.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Has the gentleman from Kentucky information as to whether or not any of the departments of the Government contemplate taking over that new Washington Hotel?

Mr. SHERLEY. I have not heard about that at all. But there is a definite estimate submitted by the Treasury Department for $4,200,000 for the purpose of buying the Arlington Hotel site and erecting upon it a 10-story building, to be used as an annex to the Treasury Department.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Are the wooden buildings that the gentleman has described similar in character to the wooden buildings that have been built for the Food Administration and the Fuel Administration?

Mr. SHERLEY. They are, except that they are three story instead of two story.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Can the gentleman tell us anything as to how they were built?

Mr. SHERLEY. They were built out of moneys allotted to them by the President, or otherwise available.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. What was the cost?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think some of them in the first instance may have cost about $2, but those now in course of erection are costing $2.25.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. How are these concrete buildings to be erected? On the contract plan or the cost-plus plan?

Mr. SHERLEY. I assume what would happen would be this, that Commander Parsons, of the Bureau of Yards and Docks of the Navy, would let contracts for the construction of those buildings.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. By contract?

Mr. SHERLEY. I presume by contract. He knows the price they ought to cost.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am very much in favor of the contract plan.

Mr. SHERLEY. He knows the details of it, and we had the details before the committee.

I want to be perfectly frank with the committee. I am not a builder. I do not know what the cost is, except as experience here has shown us; but we took the testimony of the best men we could find, and I do not think we missed it as to what these buildings are to cost.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think the gentleman's explanation is very full.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman from Kentucky will remember that last summer we made a very considerable appropriation for the erection of an annex building for Treasury purposes beside the Belasco Theater. What has become of that?

Mr. SHERLEY. The plans of that building have been drawn up, but the contracts have not been let, and when the Superintendent of Public Buildings under the Treasury was before the committee he was asked about that, as he was subsequently asked by telephone as to whether he was prepared to submit his estimates of appropriations to carry out that authorization. We learned that the bids would not be invited for some weeks yet; that there was no need for this bill to carry funds in that regard. So that is the condition.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is to be a permanent building?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; that is to be a permanent building, to be connected by an underground passageway with the Treasury.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. About the Washington Hotel the gentleman says he has no knowledge?

Mr. SHERLEY. I have heard nothing of that.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is there anything more needed in this city than additional hotel accommodations?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think not. There is a lot of this space now, 3,800,000 square feet of space, that ought to be released by the Government for two purposes: First, because of the high price it has to pay for the space; and, second, that space ought to be used for the purposes for which it was originally created—hotel space and accommodations to people who come here, and to the employees who have to live here.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. What proportion of this 3,800,000 square feet will be vacated when these buildings are constructed?

Mr. SHERLEY. I can not answer that question.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman did answer it some time ago; 174,400 square feet.

Mr. SHERLEY. I was going to say this, that the statement that is presented showed that they expected to release 174,400 square feet, but I believe and hope that with the consolidation of a lot of these various departments in these new buildings, a great deal of this most expensive space can be given up, and, of course, when the war shall have ended and we have gotten past the peak, which we have not yet reached, there ought to be a giving up of a great deal of this space and full use made of the buildings which we are undertaking to build now.

Mr. FESS. There is a probability of a growing demand. Is there any probability that that growth will continue?

Mr. SHERLEY. My judgment is that if the war continues for a couple of years this building program is going to be laughed at and looked upon then as being as inadequate as last year's program is laughed at and looked upon as inadequate now.

In other words, while we debate, the activities of the Government and the growth of these departments are such as to make your figures antiquated; and one of the difficulties we had was that we were never able to keep the thing straightened out. From day to day a department would tell informally that they needed so many thousand square feet, and then they would hurry down to my room and tell me afterwards that they were mistaken and ask me not to tie them to that, because they had discovered that they were going to need so much more, representing increases sometimes of 30, 40, or 50 per cent. The result was that we ceased to try to work out just the amount of space that was necessary. We brought in a proposition that we knew was conservative, that was well within what is at present needed.

Mr. FESS. Then we ought not to be surprised if we are told within a year from now that none of this space has been vacated?

Mr. SHERLEY. In my judgment, if the war continues an additional year this Congress will be confronted with the necessity of additional buildings.

Miss RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Miss RANKIN. Did your committee consider an appropriation for temporary quarters for women employed by the Government during the war?

Mr. SHERLEY. We did not consider it as a committee. I personally have given some thought to it, as I stated the other day. It has been apparent, I think, to all of us who have followed the expansion of the Government and to those of us who have simply looked at the city as we came back and forth to and from the Capitol, that provision would have to be made, particularly for housing women employees who are coming in, to enable them to have suitable accommodations; but nothing is suggested in this bill and nothing is now proposed to be done by the Committee on Appropriations with reference to that matter.

Now, gentlemen, I do not know that I can add any more to what I have said.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I should like to ask one question.

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The proposed building down in Potomac Park, opposite the Pan American Building, will have no street car facilities very near it?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not think that is quite the situation, if the gentleman will permit. It is proposed to extend the Pennsylvania Avenue line, which now turns and goes down on G Street, so as to make a loop; and, in fact, it is now being extended down to and on to Virginia Avenue. That will bring that car line within two or three squares, at the outside, of these buildings.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I did not know that was being done.

Mr. SHERLEY. And the other car line, at Seventeenth and H Streets, is considerably less than a mile away—less than half a mile from the nearer end of these new buildings. The buildings themselves will extend a considerable distance.

We looked at a great many sites. We went down on this ground. We considered all the places that were suggested. We do not present this as being an ideal solution. We present it as being the most practical solution that the committee were able to work out, and we ask those who would be critical of it to present an alternative as good or better before they undertake to deny this work.

Now, I do not want to take time to read a letter that I received just two days ago from the Secretary of War, begging that he be authorized to go ahead, without waiting upon Congress, because of the present need for building space. I can only say to the committee and ask them to believe me when I say that there has not been a day for the past month when I have not had from one to three calls from different departments urging and begging that something be done about the building program, and that we permit them to go ahead with this work in order that they may not be further handicapped. Now, that is the situation. It has not been a pleasant thing to do. It has not been an easy thing to do, but we would have been derelict in our duty if we had not come to you with a proposal that we thought would help to solve the thing.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky, and he knows well, that the facts demonstrate how little Congress looks ahead in the matter of appropriating for the Government. It is only a few years ago, comparatively speaking, that all the property between the Botanic Garden and Fifteenth Street, clear down to the Treasury Building, could have been purchased or condemned by the Government for less than $10,000,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. For $9,000,000 and a fraction, and a bill actually passed the Senate providing for it, but that bill was stopped here and never passed the House.

Mr. SHERLEY. There is a better illustration than that. If we had simply had the wisdom last year to have taken all the ground lying back of the Pan American Building, the Continental Memorial Hall of the Daughters of the American Revolution, and the Red Cross Building, running on back to the Government naval hospital, which might have been bought for approximately $1 a square foot, and had put on that ground concrete buildings, we would have had a solution of this problem for some time to come.

Instead of that, these bureaus and departments—the Fuel Administration, the National Defense Council, the War Trade Board, and all these other bureaus—have gone on getting a little piece here and there, building, building, and building, while Congress did nothing. That is the situation, for which my committee, perhaps, is as much to blame as any, because last year we undertook to deal with the matter and did not deal with it adequately.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. Illustrating the fact that these increases are likely to continue, as the gentleman says, it is only necessary to call attention of the committee to the fact that when the estimates were made for the department for the $2,000,000 temporary buildings it was supposed that only about 700,000 square feet would be required, and instead of that Congress erected 1,000,000 feet, and now we see how inadequate that is.

Mr. SHERLEY. I thought then that we were cutting our cloth pretty short, but the fear was with the committee then, and is with the committee now, of coming in here with a proposal that seemed too extravagant. We appreciated the fact that there would be a tendency on the part of Members of Congress to criticize what looked like an extravagant proposal, and so last year the chairman of the committee and the committee following him proposed only the building of 1,000,000 square feet.

Mr. TOWNER. And that exceeded the estimates made by about 300,000 square feet?

Mr. SHERLEY. It exceeded definite estimates, but we could then see a great deal more was coming. I shall be glad to explain further, if I can, any other details of this matter. I trust that the committee may accept the judgment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. BARNHART. Is it the attitude of the Committee on Appropriations to assume further responsibility of taking over to itself the construction of the housing questions that are now coming up for employees of the Government?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will say, speaking for myself, and I have no right to speak for anyone but myself, that if anyone desires to take over the building program in the future I wish him God-speed, and I shall not interfere with him taking it, providing action is had.

The only reason for the committee acting at this time was not with the desire to interfere with the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee, not with the idea of adding to the power or jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations, but because there came inevitably and tied to the proposals for the expansion of these various departments the question of housing them. It was urged upon the committee, and urged with such force that we dare not disregard without being derelict to our duty, the request that this bill be made the medium for affording relief from a situation that was intolerable.

Mr. BARNHART. It could have gone through in the regular way in these two months and a half of the duration of Congress, in which time the matter might have been submitted to the proper committee and have been considered and reported out with an authorization in the regular way.

Mr. SHERLEY. I presume the other committee could have taken jurisdiction and could have acted, though, as I stated on Saturday, I do not think any committee could fully examine all angles of this matter without covering practically the scope that we had to cover in the deficiency bill; but, in any event, that is behind us now.

Mr. BARNHART. In any event, it would seem to be consistent with these departments when they do come to Congress that they should go to the committee that is duly authorized to take up these questions and consider them.

Mr. SHERLEY. I want to simply say in response to that that I do not control the departments, and have not invited estimates from them touching any matters and do not expect to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing the investigation authorized by the deficiency appropriation act approved April 17, 1917, to be conducted by the Committee on the District of Columbia, or a subcommittee thereof, $5,000, to continue available during the Sixty-fifth Congress.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order to the paragraph just read.

Mr. SHERLEY. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman is too late, and it is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. SANFORD. I was on my feet attempting to get recognition by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WEBB). I think the gentleman from New York was in time; he was trying to get recognition.

Mr. SANFORD. I want to ask the chairman of the committee to cite the authority for this appropriation. The burden is upon him to show the law authorizing the item.

Mr. SHERLEY. In the deficiency appropriation act of April 17, 1917, there is this language:

That after the passage of this act the members of the Committee on the District of Columbia, or a subcommittee thereof appointed by the present chairman of said committee, be, and are hereby, authorized to continue the investigation directed by House resolution 225 of the Sixty-fourth Congress, and the expenses for the purpose as provided in House resolution 256, Sixty-fourth Congress, out of the contingent fund of the House, a sum not exceeding $7,500 in addition to the unexpended balance of amount heretofore authorized.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I submit that that is not simply an appropriation out of the contingent fund but is a direct authorization as a matter of law, not by a resolution of the House as has been the practice frequently in the past, but an actual declaration of law whereby the committee is authorized to continue the work and certain funds made available. They came before the committee with the statement that the funds were exhausted and asked additional appropriation under the authority in the language I have read. The committee had only the discretion of determining whether or not to vote the money.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Chairman, there is no question but that the Appropriation Committee in this act of 1917, so long as there was no point of order made to the item, could insert in an appropriation bill a provision assigning for this purpose a definite sum of money out of the contingent fund of the House. Of course, if a point of order had been made the item would have been stricken out. It is significant that they appropriated the money from the contingent fund, over which they had no jurisdiction. They did not provide for a permanent bureau of the Government to continue until some act of Congress was passed, but they provided for this investigation "after the passage of this act." These words do not reveal any intention to create a permanent institution. Such an institution could have been established so that in each appropriation bill an item could be carried for this work; but the words used are: "After the passage of the act." They did not say "hereafter this committee shall be permanently authorized to do so and so," or words to that effect. It can not be said that under Rule XXI this appropriation is authorized as a continuance of a public work—the only theory on which the chairman could claim that it ought to stay in the bill—it can not be said that this is a continuance of a public work or object because it has been repeatedly held by different chairmen that these public works or objects that are entitled to continuance without any authority refer to tangible things, like buildings or something of that kind. I call the Chair's attention to the provision in the rules, page 363:

By public works or objects already in progress (within the meaning of this rule) are meant only things of a tangible nature like buildings, roads, etc., and not duties of officials in executive departments or the continuance of a work indefinite as to completion and intangible in nature, like the gauging of streams.

If this provision was for the completion of some definite object, a building or a structure, it could, of course, be contended that that original authority in an appropriation bill would give authority to continue bringing in an appropriation to carry it to completion.

But this appropriation is merely, according to the appropriation bill in which it appears, an appropriation of a sum of money not exceeding $7,500 to enable this committee to continue certain investigations that were authorized back in 1916. It is worth while to note, too, that the item now in the appropriation bill before us is a change of law, because in the act of 1917 the appropriation is out of the contingent fund, and now the Appropriation Committee has changed it and provided, not for setting aside a sum out of a contingent fund but providing for an appropriation out of the General Treasury. That is a change of existing law; but I think the important consideration is the object sought by this appropriation, that it is not a continuing object; it is not an object that ought to be continued under this rule; and is not a thing especially excepted by this rule. I think there is no authority for the provision.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, what the object may be is not a matter for the Chair to determine. The language expressly declares what the appropriation is for, and the language in the pending bill is exactly similar to the authorization contained in the deficiency act of last year. It was not simply in allotment of money out of the contingent fund, but was a declaration of law. Whether that was intended is not for me to say, but the effect of it was to create a law on the statute books which says that after the passage of the act this committee shall do certain things that were authorized, and then gave them the money to carry out the doing of that. When the money ran out there was presented the question of a deficiency, and that question was the question that came before the committee. I will be very glad to speak in justification of the appropriation on its merits when the Chair has decided the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. (Mr. WEBB). The Chair was under the impression first that this legislation was enacted by a former Congress, but I find now that the law was passed by the last session of the present Congress, and this being the case the appropriation seems to be entirely in order during this Congress. The language has some "earmarks" of being permanent legislation, but the Chair does not pass on that question now.

Mr. SHERLEY. I suggest also that it was done at the last session of this Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. Therefore it seems to be a continuing appropriation, at least during the life of this Congress.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. If the Chair pleases, it is not the intention of the Chair to hold it is a continuing appropriation, but is an authorization for an appropriation?

The CHAIRMAN. As long as this Congress lasts, at least, it is a continuing authorization for an appropriation. As the gentleman from Kansas suggests, it is only a continuing authorization.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It may be an authorization for an appropriation, but it can not be construed as a continuing appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that it meant to be an authorization during the life of this Congress; possibly longer, but I shall not pass on that point. Any appropriation made under this law during this Congress would certainly be upheld during the life of this Congress, and therefore the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire briefly to make this statement in justification of the action taken by the committee. As the result of the activities of the Committee on the District of Columbia in checking the accounts between the District of Columbia and the Federal Government there has been recovered for the Federal Government sums that in the aggregate run over $2,000,000.

Prior to the Sixty-fifth Congress there was recovered in connection with the Government Hospital for the Insane $719,535; relief of poor account, 1879, $3,825; error, deduction from revenue, 1897, $8,952; interest paid on last two items, $2,810; Washington Market Co., part rental, $166,012; Washington Market Co., future rentals $202,500; interest on 3.65 bonds, $586,067; and the Government Hospital for Insane, $282,754; or a total prior to the Sixty-fifth Congress of $1,972,458. Recovered during Sixty-fifth Congress on account of court fines in United States cases the sum of $235,750, or a total of $2,208,209. There was an additional indebtedness ascertained and reported to the Committee on Appropriations in December, 1917, on account of construction and equipment of District jail, $125,000, and loan made by act of April 18, 1874, of $97,740, or a total of $222,740. Incomplete investigation indicates that there will be further recoveries of some $300,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, in the face of that showing, the committee did not feel warranted in denying this very small amount of money for the continuation of this investigation.

Mr. MADDEN. The committee concluded after its investigation that the expenditure of this $5,000 would result in yielding to the Treasury of the United States some $300,000 or $400,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. That was the conclusion on the presentation made to us by the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly, if that can be brought about, it is well worth the expenditure of $5,000.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to say anything, because I really have not an opinion as to the merits of this question. I do, however, wish to call to the attention of the committee what the action of Congress has been on this subject.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] says that what he has said is only to be understood as justifying the action of his committee. Of course, it must occur to everyone of us that if a committee of this House is to authorize the expenditure of public moneys out of the contingent fund that action should not come at the instance of the Appropriations Committee. At the close of the last Congress the House gave particular attention to that very subject and to the continuance of this appropriation, which has been running since 1916. Since that time this committee has spent considerable sums of money in investigating the bookkeeping between the Federal Government and the District of Columbia, and at the close of the Sixty-fourth Congress this matter was presented in detail and the House, by a very large vote, on the very last night of the session, and after considering all of the facts, voted against a continuance of this expenditure.

It is not my purpose to say that this money is not wisely spent. I can only say as a member of the Committee on Accounts that I do not know how it is spent; nor is it a matter of my concern; but I do think it is a matter for the concern of the Congress that moneys that are spent in this way by committees of Congress should be spent in a manner that can be said to be duly authorized.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit—

Mr. SANFORD. It does not seem to me that these expenditures are duly authorized when they are brought in here originally as items in a deficiency bill. I do not approve of that method of doing business. In the first place, there is a vast sum of money, I do not know how much, that is appropriated annually for the support of what we call the Auditor for the State and Other Departments, a public officer, a public bureau of the Government, especially created to do this work. For a committee of Congress to come in here and say that that public bureau of the Government has authorized somebody to run through that $2,000,000 and not have an investigation of it, on its face shows a bad performance of public business. If the auditors of the State and of other departments are not doing their public duties, they should be removed from office. If they are permitting anybody to take $2,000,000 of the public funds, then this very committee, that has been operating since 1916, should make a report to this Congress, and with the facts before us we should act. I do not believe in letting anybody run away with $2,000,000 or more—

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, it is not a question of what the present auditors are doing, it is a question of what has happened in the past, and this has been a checking up that has resulted in recovering a large amount of money. Now, the plain facts speak for themselves, and in view of the statements made we were warranted in presenting to the House an appropriation of $5,000, not out of the contingent fund but out of the Treasury of the United States, to carry on this work.

Mr. SANFORD. Will the gentleman let me say to him in answer to that, so far as I know, no facts appear. The gentleman has read a statement of large and appalling figures but with this committee at work since the time it was authorized, in 1916, in the last Congress, if we want to see the facts appear, those facts should appear in the report of that committee; but there is no report of that committee.

Mr. SHERLEY. I know how the facts appear, because the Committee on Appropriations have carried the provisions, as they are carrying them now, which charge to the District of Columbia the difference and credit it to the Government of the United States.

Mr. SANFORD. I know those facts may appear to the gentleman and his committee.

Mr. SHERLEY. They are in the law. They ought to appear also to the gentleman, if he will read the law.

Mr. SANFORD. They ought not to appear to the gentleman in the sense in which the chairman of the committee speaks. Also, if this committee has accomplished this purpose and these results, those results should appear in the report of the committee. I think it is a bad policy to allow a committee of this Congress from time to time to continue the expenditure of public money for doing a public work of this kind without having its results appear in a formal report. I believe investigating committees should be appointed occasionally by this Congress, but when appointed they should report and the Congress should know what they are doing, and it should know from their own statements. The same statement the gentleman makes now was made in the Sixty-fourth Congress, and since that time I have seen no report of the committees. I do not wish to be considered as occupying the position of criticizing anything that has been done by this committee or by this subcommittee; but inasmuch as this item for a long time was carried out of the contingent fund of the House, I think when the House refused to carry it further, if it were to be taken up again, it should have been taken up by the appropriate committee, which is the Committee on Accounts.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For folding speeches and pamphlets, at a rate not exceeding $1 per thousand, $12,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SHERLEY: Page 81, line 18, after the sum "$12,000" insert the following: "to continue available during the fiscal year 1919."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, that relates to the item for folding speeches and pamphlets. Some of this expenditure will be after July 1. The amendment is to make it available during the next fiscal year.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the Clerk: For two additional telephone operators from March 1 to June 30, 1918, inclusive, at the rate of $900 per annum each, $600.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order to this item.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York makes a point of order on the item.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I think the matter is subject to a point of order, but I would like to make this statement to the gentleman as to why it is carried in the bill.

Mr. SANFORD. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. This provision has already passed the Senate, and representations were made to the committee that there was a great complaint touching the telephone service that was being secured, and that the number of calls coming in and going out of the Capitol and the office buildings had tremendously increased. The head operator of the exchange testified that it was impossible to do the work with the force which she had available, and from the experience that the Members themselves had had it became apparent that there was need of additional operators. For that reason we felt warranted in presenting it to the House, realizing that it was subject to a point of order.

Mr. SANFORD. Does not the gentleman think that this item would just as speedily be taken care of by the Committee on Accounts by providing that the operators should be taken care of out of the contingent fund of the House?

Mr. SHERLEY. No. The Committee on Accounts has no jurisdiction over the employees of the House except as they are paid from the contingent fund.

Mr. SANFORD. This is out of the contingent fund.

Mr. SHERLEY. This paragraph appropriates directly out of the Treasury. The gentleman is making the contingent fund cover too much.

Mr. SANFORD. I hope the chairman of the committee will not say that. The work which I have to do on the Committee on Accounts is not great at all. It is almost ridiculous in amount.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not want to be disagreeable. What I mean to say is that the question of the employees of the House is not one that rests with the gentleman's committee except when they are paid from the contingent fund. I do not think that the gentleman should be sensitive about how this item is carried. It is carried here for the convenience of the membership of the House. It is probably subject to a point of order. If anybody desires to make it, all right.

Mr. SANFORD. I do not feel sensitive. On the contrary, I feel that the employment of these telephone operators belongs to the Committee on Accounts, in spite of all that is said to the contrary. I believe that they could be paid out of the contingent fund, and should be paid in that way.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the Public Printer: For five additional clerks, at the rate of $1,000 each per annum, from April 1 to June 30, 1918, inclusive, $1,250.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is presumed that these five additional clerks will have something to do with the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and that is the subject that I want to draw to the attention of the committee at the present time.

This Congress has been passing some extraordinary laws and will pass a number of others, and I have found in frequent conversation with constituents and others who come to me that the public generally is not advised as thoroughly as it ought to be about the importance of some of these laws. The other night in a small conference I drew attention to the fact that a bill was shortly to be considered which contemplated an appropriation of $500,000,000, with authority to expand an incorporation to the $4,000,000,000 limit, and that it would have control of the issue of all future bonds and stocks. Several gentlemen said they had never heard of the proposition. It was new to them. It startled them, and they wanted to know more about it. That is the trouble with the average citizen of the United States. He does not follow the proceedings of Congress as he ought to do. They do not read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Of course all of them can not get on the list.

My quota of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, for instance, is exhausted, but I am constantly in receipt of inquiries from all over the district as to additional copies. I find on inquiry to-day that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD itself, even to the limited issue of 30,000 or 35,000 copies, is not being sent out from the city of Washington.

You gentlemen who sit here and make interesting speeches and take the trouble to dig out important data—as important for the country as it is for the Congress—may be amazed to know that the information which goes into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD has not been sent to your constituents for more than two weeks. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD has not been going to Texas since the 1st of February. It has not been going to California since the 1st of February, and I may add, since the gentleman from New York is interested, that it has not been going to New York since the 1st of February. Even the newspaper offices are not getting it; and to that extent what is going on in Congress is not known to the people of the United States, except we rely upon the necessarily meager but competent reports of our friends in the press gallery.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. But while the Public Printer is unable to send out the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on account of a desire to save paper, the Bureau of Information and all the departments are running press bureaus at the cost of the people, and sending unlimited quantities of printed matter all over the United States.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is making a part of my speech and doing it better than I can. I intended to call the attention of the other side of the House to that, that hundreds of thousands of various publications issued by the Bureau of Information are going all over the United States, and—

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there—

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And probably clogging the mails, while that one vehicle of authentic information to the people of the United States, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, is not going out at all.

Now I yield to my friend from Ohio.

Mr. GORDON. Has the circulation of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD through the mails been stopped by the post-office censor?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have been unable to ascertain, but I do know that the post-office censor has been stopping the use of the mails to various publications, some of them socialistic, to be sure; but various publishers throughout the country have been complaining that the mails have been denied to them because what they publish is not satisfactory to the Postmaster General. Now, the question naturally arises as to whether too much information is going into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to suit the authorities.

Mr. GORDON. I have noticed that there has been a little socialistic trend to some of the speeches printed in the RECORD. Does the gentleman know whether that has had anything to do with the stopping of it?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not know, but there is free speech in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, on both sides of all questions, and all sides of every question, and that ought to go to the public. Members of Congress can here, and, perhaps, here only, speak fully and freely upon public questions. This is because of the limitations and censorship that prevail in other directions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended one minute. I want to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania be extended one minute. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I think he ought to have a longer extension than that, because there are other gentlemen who would like to ask him questions. I ask that his time be extended five minutes.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, if I can get the floor I can explain this thing in two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Now, I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It has been stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is not now being circulated through the mails.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD should not be suppressed. It is the one great reliable vehicle of information by which Members can express themselves to their constituents and to the country.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. But the gentleman states that it is not being circulated through the mails. I assume that that is to save space in the transportation facilities. Does the gentleman's information disclose a statement that is being circulated that literally tons of printed matter containing speeches made by a Cabinet officer are now being circulated in the trenches in France?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have heard that one use of our aeroplanes was to carry material over Germany and drop it there.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. This is not for the use of Germany or Germans. This is for the use of American soldiers who will be at home to vote in 1920.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not know that, but have heard that millions of speeches have recently been printed and are to be circulated. Soldiers may be getting some of them in anticipation of the election.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Does not the gentleman know that the reason for the suspension of the printing of the full number of copies of the daily RECORD is because of the shortage of the kind and quality of white print paper that is used for that publication, and does he not know that recently a new supply has been secured, and that now the back numbers of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD are being sent out?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If that is true that will help to explain the situation, but I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the Government Printing Office is running full tilt printing all kinds of publications for the departments and sending out more than the average Member of Congress can comprehend.

Mr. WALSH. Just one further question. Are not these highly intelligent communities which the gentleman has mentioned—Philadelphia, Texas, and New York—

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman had better include Boston.

Mr. WALSH. And Boston and Cape Cod, these places that the gentleman mentions as having been deprived of this publication, are they not getting along pretty well without it?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. They may have gotten along very well, but I wish to say that some inquiries have come from the vicinity of Cape Cod as to why the RECORD did not appear with the daily objections of the gentleman from Massachusetts. [Mr. WALSH.] [Laughter.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman from Kansas asserts that tons of the speeches of a certain Cabinet officer are going over to our soldiers in France. Can the gentleman explain, when we can not get letters or packages to the soldiers in France, how this kind of literature is enabled to go there?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am not sure that this is a postal question. The gentleman from Iowa raises the important point that the post office is involved in this proposition. It may be or may not be. It is true that the post office does have time and facilities to deliver a great variety of speeches. If rumor be true, one of them is by a former governor of New York, which got into the RECORD a few days ago under conditions described here yesterday. It was a partisan speech by a vigorous Democrat.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, the explanation of this much ado about nothing consists in the fact that the paper on which the daily RECORD is printed is a 35-pound quality of paper not used for printing anything else in the Government Printing Office. It is paper that is tough but very light.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. It needs to be tough. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARNHART. It has to be tough. [Laughter.] It is contracted for by the year, and by reason of the very severe storms and railway blockade the shipment of paper has been tied up on railway sidings. The Government Printing Office and the Public Printer came before the Committee on Printing with the proposition that either we should run out of paper entirely and have to suspend the publication of the RECORD altogether or stop printing that part that went out by mail from Washington, until the blockade was broken. The blockade has been broken, the delayed paper is coming in, and the RECORDS are now going out day after day. The daily RECORD is being printed in numerical order and is being sent out as rapidly as possible.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is not the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD printed on the same kind of paper as are the President's addresses?

Mr. BARNHART. No; this paper for the temporary RECORD is a paper used for this purpose only.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Do not they use the same kind of paper for the addresses of certain Cabinet officers now being widely circulated?

Mr. BARNHART. I do not know, but think not.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it true that hundreds of thousands of those addresses are being circulated and that they find paper for that purpose?

Mr. BARNHART. The Bulletin is printed on a heavy quality of paper of which the Government has an abundance, but we could not use it for the RECORD on account of the great bulk resultant.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Might not the suspension of the RECORD, which the gentleman refers to, have a very beneficial effect on the committee by curtailing debate on the floor of the House and elsewhere? [Laughter.]

Mr. BARNHART. My friend from Michigan is frequently right, and I think he is in this case.

The Clerk read as follows:

For equipment, material, and supplies for distribution of public documents, $750.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice that this item is for the distribution of public documents, and it seems that public documents, if printed, should be distributed. Of course, complaint is occasionally made if the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is not sent out containing the debates and proceedings of Congress, and I think perhaps the criticism offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], that the RECORD had not been sent out, was in this instance well taken, but the reason for its suspension has been given by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART]. It happens that during the period that the publication of the RECORD was suspended during the last two weeks certain criticisms were directed from the floor of the House at certain governmental activities at a place called Hog Island; and it is a shame that the people of Pennsylvania were deprived of learning what had been said here about those activities and how they impressed the Members of this House. And so, in view of what has been said by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART], I am sure that the gentleman from Pennsylvania rejoices that his constituents and the constituents of his distinguished colleagues from that great Commonwealth are not longer to be kept in darkness as to what we in the American Congress think of the disclosures that have come from investigation of the governmental activities at that very busy and well-known point.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the pro forma motion. It is true the Hog Island shipyard is being built near Philadelphia. It is being constructed by the Government, or by contractors acting under direction of the Shipping Board, and is destined to be the greatest shipbuilding plant of the country. It is located on the Delaware River, where all that is hoped for it may be easily realized. For whatever scandal attaches to the work thus far, Philadelphia is not responsible. Whatever Philadelphia has done in furnishing men and material is highly creditable and as patriotic as the gentleman from Massachusetts could desire. For whatever is discreditable I shall have to refer the gentleman from Massachusetts to the "big brains" from New York and Boston, who secured the contracts and who may advise him as to "the ways that are dark."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That all branches of the government of the District of Columbia shall be considered a governmental establishment for the purposes of section 7 of the deficiency appropriation act approved October 6, 1917.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Kentucky a question, whether there has been any provision or likely to be made with reference to facilities for the Federal Board for Vocational Education?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will say to the gentleman that when we finish the reading of the bill I propose to ask unanimous consent to return to page 3 for the purpose of inserting a provision making $3,095 of their funds available for payment of rent here in the District of Columbia.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, on page 75 there was a point of order pending, interposed by myself, to the first paragraph under the heading "Department of Agriculture." I desire to withdraw that point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa withdraws his point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 3 of the bill for the purpose of offering an amendment after line 25, as follows.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to return to page 3 of the bill for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SHERLEY: Page 3, after line 25, insert the following:

"Federal Board for Vocational Education: Not to exceed $3,395 of the appropriation contained in section 7 of the act entitled 'An act to provide for the promotion of vocational education, etc.' approved February 23, 1917, shall be available for the rental of quarters in the District of Columbia for the said board from the date of its organization until June 30, 1918."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 9867, the urgent deficiency bill, and had directed him to report the same back to the House, with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not the Chair will put them en grosse. [After a pause.] The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHERLEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HOUSING OF SHIPBUILDING EMPLOYEES.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I present for printing under the rule a conference report on the bill (H. R. 3389) to authorize and empower the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation to purchase, lease, requisition, or otherwise acquire improve, or unimproved land, houses, and buildings, and for other purposes.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by printing an address which I delivered to a gathering of Federal employees on Friday night last.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record by printing an address he delivered last Friday night to Government clerks. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman has made so many speeches on the subject of the Government clerks that I would like to know in what respect this differs from the others and whether it justifies printing in the Record.

Mr. BORLAND. I do not believe it would enlighten the gentleman from Illinois. It might enlighten other Members.

Mr. MADDEN. Then I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to—

Mr. MILLER of Washington, from the 20th to the 26th of February, for the purpose of making patriotic addresses.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama, at the request of Mr. ALMON, for three days, on account of important official business.

SOLDIERS AND SAILORS' CIVIL RIGHTS BILL.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I hope that the gentleman will withhold that for a moment. I would like to send a bill to conference.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have no objection, but I was requested by the majority leader to adjourn the House without the consideration of unanimous-consent requests.

Mr. WEBB. This is not an ordinary unanimous-consent request. I want to send a bill to conference, and I know the majority leader has no objection, in view of the demand for this legislation.

The SPEAKER. What is the request?

Mr. WEBB. That the bill H. R. 6361, known as the soldiers and sailors' civil rights bill, be taken from the Speaker's table, that the Senate amendments be disagreed to, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6361) to extend protection to the civil rights of members of the Military and Naval Establishments of the United States engaged in the present war.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to take this bill from the Speaker's table, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair announces the following conferees.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WEBB, Mr. CARLIN, and Mr. VOLSTEAD.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow, in order to begin the consideration of the railroad bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion.

ADJOURNMENT.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 36 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 19, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of communication from the Postmaster General submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation required by the Post Office Department for mail bags and equipment, Postal Service, for the fiscal year 1918 (H. Doc. No. 940); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 19, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we are here petitioners before Thy throne. Day by day we meet obligations and responsibilities that we dare not meet alone, and we seek Thy guidance and blessing. We come to Thee with no complaint, but we come with the joy of being yet unsatisfied, of believing that Thou hast larger things for us in our individual life and in our Nation. We pray Thee to lead us on in the ever-unfolding plan of the Divine will until we shall see Thy purpose accomplished in all the earth. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6361) to extend protection to the civil rights of members of the Military and Naval Establishments of the United States engaged in the present war, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WEBB, Mr. CARLIN, and Mr. VOLSTEAD managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 9867) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3389) to authorize and empower the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation to purchase, lease, requisition, or otherwise acquire improved or unimproved land, houses, buildings, and for other purposes.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MYERS. I have a short memorial from the Montana Legislature, which is now in session, to the Congress of the United States. I ask that it may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

HELENA, MONT., February 16, 1918.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States assembled:

Whereas the Fifteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, meeting in extraordinary session in response to a proclamation of the governor calling this body together for the consideration of measures necessary to a successful prosecution of the war, among which, of primary importance, is a bill providing for loans at low rates of interest to needy farmers for the enhancement of agricultural production in the State: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Fifteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana hears with grave concern the reports from Washington of the intention of Congress to reduce a contemplated appropriation of $750,000 toward the completion of the Flathead Reservation irrigation project, in western Montana, to $250,000, and does hereby go on record as in favor of, and registers its wish for an appropriation of, $750,000 for said project; and it is further

Resolved, That a failure of the Congress of the United States to make such appropriation of $750,000 would be violative of the best interests of this Nation, a great discouragement to the farmers and to the farming interests of Montana, thereby resulting in decreased production in one of the most fertile sections of the State of Montana and, being prompted by a consideration for the best interests of this Nation and the State of Montana, demands favorable action by the United States Congress of an appropriation of $750,000 toward the completion of the Flathead Reservation irrigation project; and it is hereby ordered that a copy of this resolution be telegraphed to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the President of the United States Senate, with the recommendation that it be read before both bodies and referred to the proper committees.

J. F. O'CONNOR,
Speaker of House.
W. W. McDOWELL,
President of Senate.

Mr. PHELAN presented a memorial of the chamber of commerce of Riverside, Cal., remonstrating against any repeal of the advanced rates on second-class mail matter; which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. McLEAN presented a petition of the Connecticut State Branch of the United National Association of Post Office Clerks, of New Haven, Conn., praying for an increase in the salaries of postal employees; which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented petitions of the Swedish Independent Club, of New Britain; of the Equal Franchise Club, of Middletown; and of sundry citizens of New Haven, Hartford, and Woodmont, all in the State of Connecticut, praying for the submission of a Federal suffrage amendment to the legislatures of the several States; which were ordered to lie on the table.

THE CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I beg the indulgence of the Senate for a moment to ask a question that concerns what I think is a very important matter.

I am receiving letters from constituents in different parts of my State saying that they have not received a copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD since the 1st day of February. I made inquiry and found that, in consequence of the shortage of paper—at least, that is the reason given—the sending of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD outside of the District of Columbia has been entirely discontinued. Mr. President, to me this is a very important matter. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is, I think, the only uncensored publication that we have at the present time, and certainly the people ought to have the privilege of reading it.

I presume there is a shortage of paper, perhaps to such an extent that some action of this kind becomes necessary unless
